Steel 'will resign' if he loses right to veto manifesto

By Philip Webster, Political Reporter

Mr David Steel is expected by his close colleagues to resign the Liberal leadership if the party assembly votes next month to take away his right of veto over the contents of the general election manifesto.

Mr Steel, said to be improving by the day after suffering from depression brought on by a viral infection, plans to take no part in the assembly debate on the manifesto and other proposed changes to the Liberal constitution which are seen as further challenges to his authority. He has not even decided whether to attend that debate.

But Mr Steel's friends are in no doubt that he would find it impossible to carry on if the move by grassroots activists to remove his manifesto veto were successful.

Daventry Liberal Association, backed by the National League of Young Liberals and a grassroots organization called Campaign 83, have tabled a motion seeking to delete from the party constitution a clause in "Section K9" which says: "The Leader of the party shall have final authority over the content of the manifesto."

It springs from dissatisfaction among activists over the way Mr Steel drew up the joint general election manifesto with the Social Democratic Party, and the alleged failure of the manifesto to reflect party policy on defence, local government and blood sports.

They were particularly upset that it failed to make a commitment to ban deployment of cruise missiles. The Liberal assembly two years ago voted to support a ban.

Mr Steel does not oppose a proposal by three MPs, Mr Cyril Smith, Mr David Alton, and Mr Simon Hughes, for the election of deputy leader.

although he is against their proposals for the election of a chief whip and a chairman of the parliamentary party, and the activists' other proposal to remove his overall control over political broadcasts.

But he has made clear to his friends that he regards most serious of all the threat to his authority over the manifesto.

He has said that he would not be prepared as leader, and therefore the spearhead of the national campaign, to advocate policies to which he was totally opposed, and that if the Liberals took away his manifesto authority they would risk going down the path which had led the Labour Party to its present position, with Labour leaders at the election betraying a lack of conviction about the policies they were putting over.

It is clear that Mr Steel has the backing of most MPs over his position on the manifesto proposal, although Mr Hughes, MP for Southwark and Bermondsey, said last night that he supported the removal of the veto.

He acknowledged that the plan could pose difficulties for a leader, but felt that these could be got over if the procedures for drawing up the manifesto were improved by making it a continuous process in which differences could be ironed out.

As a Liberal Party survey on the Alliance's performance in the election was published, indicating that the great majority of Liberal associations backed it and that a merger between the two parties is already effectively taking place in some constituencies, SDP activists moved yesterday to support their leader, Dr David Owen, in his opposition to early moves to a merger.

Members of the Council for Social Democracy have tabled a motion for the debate at the Salford conference next month on the party's future which sets out to emphasize the separate identity of the SDP.

This will be taken with another motion put forward by the former MP, Mr Christopher Brocklebank-Fowler, which effectively rules out a merger by calling for closer links between the parties "within the present party constitutions".

Mr Stuart Bayliss, one of the tablers of the former motion, said yesterday: "We believe that the so-called merger debate is a secondary one. First and foremost the SDP must publicly express its own identity so that people know what we stand for - like support of the social and welfare services, efficiency in the public sector, profitability in the private sector and partnership in industry between management and workforce."

The moves reflect the opposition among SDP activists to the growing pressure from the Liberals for the joint selection of parliamentary candidates.

Mr Steel: His authority challenged.

Leader race like 'beauty contest'

By Our Political Reporter

Mr Peter Shore, a contender for the Labour leadership, said yesterday that unless the party changed its policies and its style it would need a miracle to win power at the next general election.

Mr Shore, who is considered to be running well behind Mr Neil Kinnock and Mr Roy Hattersley in the contest, said that too many trade unions had approached the leadership campaign "with an almost frivolous disregard of what is at stake - as though we were engaged in a political beauty contest".

The Shadow Chancellor's remarks, addressed to the executive council of the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation in London, were clearly directed, although he did not name him, against Mr Kinnock, who has said far less about the need for the party to change its policies than either Mr Shore, himself for Mr Hattersley.

Mr Shore said: "If the next leader fails to lead; if we fail to learn the lessons of the past four years; if we serve up the same policies with the same style and the same mismanagement of recent years, then we should need a miracle to win power again in 1987-88".

The fate of the Labour Party, of British industry and of the country could be crucially affected by the votes cast on October 2, he said.

Meanwhile, Mr Hattersley responded to suggestions that he might feel more at home in the Liberal-Social Democratic Party Alliance, by declaring in a BBC radio interview: "I am the public enemy number one of the Alliance."

He said the Alliance's constant attacks on him undermined the strength of his moderate stance and the threat it posed to the Alliance.

Maestro sales set six-month record

By Our Motoring Correspondent

The new Maestro car, the alleged target of left-wing infiltration at BL's Cowley plant, is proving so successful that dealers are forecasting a shortage later this month.

In spite of being one of the cars not supported by factory discounts and dealer bonuses, the Maestro has had a better initial six months than Vauxhall's outstandingly successful Cavalier.

The Cavalier was launched in September, 1981, and 25,400 were sold in its first six months. The Maestro appeared on March 1 this year and an estimated 49,000 will have been sold when its first six months ends on August 31. About 10,000 were registered in the first 10 days of August.

The Maestro has been averaging between 4 and 5 per cent of the market and is now in sixth place behind the Cavalier. Five per cent of the market is considered to be good for a model with a restricted engine range of only 1.3 and 1.6 litres appearing in hatchback form only at this stage.

The Cavalier is a much wider range, comprising both hatchback and saloon versions with engines up to two litres.

Mr Harold Musgrove, Austin Rover chairman, is confident that when the hatchback Maestro is joined in the spring by its bigger stablemate, the bigger LM11, it will do for the British company what the Cavalier did for Vauxhall.

The General Motors subsidiary doubled its market share in four years. Thanks to the Cavalier's seven per cent penetration, it expects to end 1983 holding 16 per cent and ready to challenge BL's position as No 2 with 20 per cent. Ford, the leader, has 30 per cent of the market.

The Maestro set a record for the highest number of registrations by a British car in its first month, when 8,213 were registered. The previous best was 7,107 by the Fiesta in February, 1977. But almost immediately Maestro production was stopped for three-and-a-half weeks by the so-called "washing up" strike. It cost the company 9,000 Maestros.

Admission of lying criticized by union

By David Felton and Clifford Webb

Transport union officials complained last night that their attempts to defend the 13 alleged left-wing infiltrators dismissed by BL had been made more difficult by one of them admitting that she had lied on her job application form.

Local officials of the Transport and General Workers Union and senior shop stewards meet managers at the Cowley plant near Oxford today to press the company to rescind the dismissal notices. A further two appeals against dismissal were rejected by the company yesterday, bringing the total rejected to 13.

Mr David Buckle, district secretary of the union, said last night that the news conference called by Miss Stephanie Grant had not "helped us in any way with the representations I shall be making on behalf of the 13. Indeed I think she has made it more difficult now."

On BBC radio, Mr Roger Rosewell, a former Marxist shopfloor organizer, said extreme left-wing groups will step up efforts to infiltrate key British companies when the economy starts to expand.

Mr Elliott, an unemployed civil engineer, who said he went to America to set up an exchange programme between an English school and one in North Carolina, added that immigration officials told him the law which dispensed sailors from having a visa was changed seven months ago.

When Mr Elliott arrived a week ago at the island of Nantucket off Massachusetts, he was told Nantucket was not an official port of entry and he would have to go to Newport, Rhode Island, or New York City.

"Well, when I came up to Newport, there was a good northerly blowing, so I thought why waste it and entered in New York", Mr Elliott said. He made his way down Long Island Sound and the East River, and later went to Federal Plaza to present his papers. He was told he did not have proper clearances and would have to appear before a federal judge.

Fall of 39% in Brixton muggings

By Nicholas Timmins

Muggings in Brixton fell by 39 per cent in the first six months of this year, police said yesterday.

The reduction was part of an overall decline of 20 per cent in crimes of violence reported in the Lambeth police district as a whole.

Commander Alex Marnoch, head of "L" District police, said the police could only guess at the reasons for the decline in the crimes which had tended to rise steadily. But he attributed them to changes in police tactics and to greater cooperation and trust between the police and the public, and described the figures as "promising and hopeful".

Since January, he said, an extra 93 officers had been patrolling the streets in the district in line with the new strategy adopted by Sir Kenneth Newman, the commissioner for the Metropolitan Police.

The CTD street crime squad had been using targeting and surveillance techniques in cooperation with the intelligence unit set up at East Dulwich Police Station which had led to the arrest of "some very active robbers".

The figures show that robbery and other violent theft in Brixton - the category that covers muggings - fell from 801 in the first six months of last year to 489 in the equivalent period this year, a decline of 39 per cent.

The figures show that there was some displacement of street crime to Streatham which saw a 16 per cent increase in robbery and other violent theft and a 5 per cent rise in burglaries. But Commander Marnoch said the increase in Streatham was nowhere near the decline elsewhere.

"The level of crime is still far too high," he said, "but we are going in the right direction."

He said that in recent months "people have been increasingly willing to come forward and help the police. They will not put up with the degree of violent crime that existed before."

Older members of the community were taking a more responsible attitude, he said, contacts with young people had improved and the atmosphere around Raiton Road - Brixton's "front line" and the scene of the 1981 riots - was more relaxed.

Chad puts out peace feelers to Libya

By Our Foreign Staff

President Hissene Habré said yesterday that his Government has had contacts with Libya in search of a peaceful end to Chad's civil war, but he rejected talks with the Libyan-backed rebel leader, Mr Goukouni Oueddei.

"We have even knocked on Tripoli's door to try to find a peaceful solution," he told a press conference. He declined to elaborate and there was no indication where or at what level the contacts took place.

But it was the first official reference to peace feelers towards Libya, which backs former president Goukouni and is blamed by Habré for reviving Chad's 17-year civil war.

Looking sombre and subdued, the blue-robed president said the military stalemate after the recent rebel counter-offensive was still holding in both the east and north.

Direct fighting between government and rebel forces has not been reported for the past three days, but Mr Habré claimed Libyan aircraft bombed Government positions at Oum-Chalouba and Kororo on Sunday.

According to diplomatic sources the rebels hold both these outposts but the Government has not confirmed their loss.

A report from Lagos suggests that Mr Goukouni has been missing since the end of last month.

Sources close to the Chadian opposition in the neighbouring Benin republic, said the former president disappeared at the end of June.

Mr Goukouni was in Faya-Largeau when Mr Habré's soldiers launched their successful counter-attack on July 30. He had gone there from the southern Libyan town of Sebha, the base of Libyan operations in Chad.

According to this version Mr Goukouni moved out just as Mr Habré's army launched its offensive.

In Paris, French concern over the country's deepening military commitment to Chad was underlined yesterday with publication of an opinion poll showing 53 per cent of French people disapproved of the sending of troops to Chad, compared with 28 per cent in favour.

Apology by US for aiding Barbie

From Nicholas Ashford Washington

The United States has apologized to France for helping Klaus Barbie, the "Butcher of Lyons", to evade French justice after the Second World War.

The apology coincides with the publication yesterday of a 220-page report into American complicity in the Barbie affair.

The report shows that Barbie worked as a paid informant between 1947 and 1951, and that US Army officers prevented his extradition to France by concealing knowledge of his whereabouts from the United States Government.

It also shows that the US Army arranged his subsequent flight to Bolivia where he lived for the next 33 years.

Declaring that "We have delayed justice in Lyons", Mr Allan Ryan, a senior Justice Department official who compiled the report, said in a memorandum that "I therefore believe it appropriate... that the United States Government express to the Government of France its regret for its responsibility in delaying the due process of law in the case of Klaus Barbie".

The report and a mass of accompanying documents detail how Barbie was first recruited by the American Counter Intelligence Corps (CIC), and how, in the summer of 1950, CIC officers deliberately withheld information about his whereabouts to prevent his extradition to face trial on charges of war crimes. He lived in Bolivia as "Klaus Altmann" until his extradition to France last February.

The report also contains intriguing references to the intense rivalry which existed between American, British, and French intelligence services in occupied Germany during the immediate post-war era.

Barbie had originally offered himself as an informant to the British, who were said to be "very interested" in obtaining his services. However, Barbie turned to the Americans after allegedly being mistreated by the British following his arrest by them at the end of 1946.

Scientology officers expelled

By Clifford Longley

The Church of Scientology has excommunicated 12 members of its headquarters staff in Britain for misconduct, after an internal investigation prompted by the conviction and imprisonment of senior Scientologists in the United States. Several other staff in the Office of Guardians of the church in East Grinstead, Sussex, have been moved to other positions.

The expulsion of the 12 members was recommended by Mrs Edith Buchele, the new external affairs director of the British church, after she uncovered what she described yesterday as "a complete mess."

Charges against the 12 included the misuse of church funds to launch a series of libel actions, particularly against British newspapers, but also against Scotland Yard and the Department of Health and Social Security. One senior member of the staff of the Office of Guardians has falsely claimed to be a barrister.

The church's policy, as defined by its founder Mr Ron Hubbard, is to use legal means only as a last resort but above all "to live at peace with one's environment". Mrs Buchele said.

The office, which at one point had a staff of about forty, was closed earlier this year when the last expulsion happened. The international headquarters of the church has now been transferred from East Grinstead to Los Angeles.

A new open policy has been adopted by the church in Britain, which has hitherto been noted for its secrecy. Yesterday The Times was allowed free access to any part of the complex of church buildings at St Hill Manor, East Grinstead.

BMA launches inquiry into alternative forms of health treatment

By Nicholas Timmins

The British Medical Association yesterday launched an inquiry into alternative health treatments including faith healing and herbalism, with a call to doctors and lay therapists to submit information on the techniques they use.

The move comes after increasing interest among doctors and others in alternative forms of medicine, with the setting up of several centres combining traditional and alternative approaches.

The association's board of science has set up a working party that expects to take anything up to two years to report, and is calling in the first instance for information on a wide range of unconventional techniques. It will consider the feasibility and possible methods of assessing the value of alternative therapies whether used alone or to complement other treatments - some of these were examined in a series of articles in The Times last week.

The working party includes Sir Douglas Black, a recent past president of the Royal College of Physicians and a former chief scientist to the Department of Health, and Professor Linford Rees, a former president of the Royal College of Psychiatrists.

The announcement of the working party was given a cautious and slightly sceptical welcome by leading figures in the alternative and holistic medical fields, some of whom doubted whether the BMA would have a sufficiently open mind.

Dr George Lewith, director of the Centre for the Study of Alternative Therapies said that the working party was a good idea "but I hope it will be objective".

If alternative treatments were to be assessed only by traditional medical methods, the working party would make little progress. Different methods of evaluation would be needed if the working party was not to be "another mechanism for supporting entrenched and rather biased views", he said.

The working party, which includes two pharmacologists and two anaesthetists, was also criticized for not containing anyone noted for expertise in alternative approaches.

Professor James Payne, Professor of anaesthetics at London University, who is chairing the working party, said that the working party would have an open mind.

"Much success is being claimed for alternative therapy so we believe the time is right to gather information. We want to know what alternative therapies people are using and how they believe they work."

"There is no question that certain hypnotic techniques and acupuncture techniques have been shown to work in certain circumstances. We need to know in what circumstances and to what extent they could be universally applied."

"There is a great list of things we need to look at. Some of my colleagues are critical of the fact that a lot of charlatans are involved in alternative therapies, but the fact that a charlatan is using a technique does not necessarily mean that the technique is wrong."

The idea, he said, was not to force alternative therapies into standard methods of assessment. "We want experts in these fields to tell us how they think their methods work."

Dr Richard Tonkin, who has been involved in the recent establishment of the Research Council for Complementary Medicine, said that the setting up of the working party was encouraging.

The BMA is asking those wishing to supply information to the working party to do so by September 30.

Joseph raises new objections to reform of O levels

By Lucy Hodges, Education Correspondent

New objections to the reform of O levels and CSE were raised yesterday by Sir Keith Joseph, Secretary of State for Education, as he announced he would make a decision on a new examination for 16-year-olds in the second quarter of next year.

His statement, designed to allay uncertainty about examination reform, said that he was asking the new examination quango, the Secondary Examinations Council, to advise him by the end of this year on how desirable it would be to have one examination at 16-plus.

His objections to the draft criteria for new mathematics and English examinations for 16-year-olds highlight his concern to ensure that the needs of all children, but especially the brighter, are met.

That concern has come across in his comments on proposed new examinations for history, French and physics. He has also made clear his distaste for new-fangled notions such as the social applications of physics.

The new English criteria developed by the Joint Council of GCE and CSE boards say students should demonstrate their ability to express care for the conventions of paragraphing, sentence structure, punctuation and spelling in the written form of the language.

Sir Keith said a new examination should also require candidates to demonstrate their competence in the structures and vocabulary of standard written and spoken English. But examiners might give "some credit for effective spoken English using vocabulary or structure suited to a limited audience".

Many English teachers will not take kindly to this emphasis on standard English.

Sir Keith, together with the Secretary of State for Wales, is worried too about the section of the joint council criteria on English in a multi-cultural society. That said examiners should consider whether special provision should be made for candidates whose mother tongue is not English.

Yesterday's statement from Sir Keith said: "National criteria for English should require all candidates to demonstrate their command of the standard forms of the language without excluding other forms."

The minister's detailed concern with examination reform is unprecedented and has given rise to worries that he is dragging his feet about a development which has been in the pipeline for more than a decade.

But politically it is a difficult decision to make in history as the minister who abolished O levels.

Drug warning given to doctors

By Pearce Wright, Science Editor

A warning to doctors to be alert for side-effects from Osmosin, a new anti-arthritis drug, has been issued by the Committee on Safety of Medicines. The warning comes after 200 reports from doctors of patients experiencing side-effects ranging from severe headaches to perforated bowels.

General practitioners have issued more than 500,000 prescriptions since the launch of the drug last December. But the number of reports received by the safety committee, under the yellow card reporting system, suggests that Osmosin is no safer than conventional drugs which it is intended to replace.

In common with Opren, the anti-arthritis drug which was withdrawn last year, Osmosin is a non-steroidal preparation which was developed to avoid the adverse reactions that occur with some of the older anti-inflammatory drugs used to treat arthritic conditions. Its biologically active component is indomethacin, which is known to have harmful interactions if taken with some other drugs.

However, Merck Sharp Dohme, the manufacturer, claims that it is well tolerated by patients because the active ingredient in the preparation is delivered into the body slowly and at a steady rate. The company's tests showed fewer side-effects than conventional indomethacin.

Tory party accused of sex bias

Mrs Carole Steggles was furious when the Conservatives rejected her as a party agent and accused them of sexual discrimination.

An industrial tribunal yesterday said she had been passed over because she was married and had four children. She had complained to Mr Cecil Parkinson, then party chairman.

But Mr Richard Price, counsel for the Conservative Party, said that Mrs Steggles had worked for the Liberals for 10 years and had not even joined the Conservative Party when she applied for the job in August of last year.

She mentioned her enthusiasm for Mrs Margaret Thatcher and the Falklands campaign, but only one month before the elections she was working for the Liberals and Mr Brian Steggles, her husband, had been a prospective Liberal candidate in Croydon North-east.

Mrs Steggles, aged 40, of Rosemary Road, Furnace Green, Crawley, West Sussex, told the tribunal that she had become disillusioned with the Liberals after the Lib-Lab pact and the alliance with the Social Democratic Party.

Mr John Leslie, a Conservative Central Office agent, said that he pointed out to all the applicants the drain on their social and private lives if they were successful. He decided that Mrs Steggles was unsuitable because she lacked the necessary characteristics, "diplomacy for example".

Mrs Steggles' failure had nothing to do with her sex or the fact that she had children, he said. "My approach to her was no different than to a man with children and a working wife."

Of the 23 applicants who passed the preliminary interview 12 were women.

The tribunal reserved its decision.

Outside the court, Mrs Steggles said: "I would have hoped the Conservative Party who helped bring in the sex discrimination law would have been a great deal more willing to pursue it. The application form 'did not say you had to be a member of the party'."

TV video games channel next year

By Bill Johnston, Electronics Correspondent

A video games television channel available 24 hours a day every day of the week is to be launched in Britain next year by W. H. Smith, the high street retail chain.

A spokesman said yesterday: "If you want to play chess at 4 o'clock in the morning then you can."

The new channel which has just completed tests in California where it is being marketed for between $10 and $15 (£7.50 and £10) per home per month is the product of the Video Games Network. The British retail group has agreed to distribute the programming to cable television operators in the United Kingdom but it intends to make its own programming eventually, tailored specifically for the home market.

A set of 20 video games will be offered on the channel. Subscribers will be equipped with an electronic keyboard which will allow them to play the games. About a quarter of the games will be changed each month.

The channel will offer more than just video games. It is the company's intention to offer educational programmes, probably 25 per cent of its programmes will fall into that category. The channel will also have the facility for shopping from the armchair at the touch of a switch, now termed "teleshopping".

W. H. Smith, which is the leading retailer for home computers, principally the Sinclair products, is also keen to expand the range of video games it stocks. "If we cannot sell them down a cable we will have them on sale," the spokesman said.

The Government has invited applications for the first 12 pilot franchises for cable television systems. The multichannel networks, probably containing about 30 channels, are the type on which the Smith channel would be sold.

The cable network would be connected to Smith's computers housing the programmes on sale.

Pupils want preparation for work

By Our Education Correspondent

Young people believe overwhelmingly that school should prepare them for work and are frustrated that it does not, according to a report published yesterday by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD).

Part of the difficulty lies with the schools because they operate in isolation from the world of work and what is taught in class ignores that world, the report says. It took two-and-a-half years to complete and was based on information from 15 countries, including Britain.

"What they [young people] will do as adults seems to have little relationship to what they do in school, even though they are repeatedly being told that school is preparation for adulthood," the report says.

A boy clerk in Britain is quoted as saying: "I found that at school we were only taught to pass exams. . . . We were not educated about life. . . . I discovered in my school life that I went to, listened to and learnt more from teachers who had worked outside the education circle. Perhaps it was a coincidence."

Schools have tried to do something about that by introducing textbooks about work, or by calling education a form of work.

"But no direct experience is offered of what it means to be a worker: adhering to time schedules, to contracts, relating to fellow workers, getting to know the position of one's job in the labour market, and so on."

Fall in apple crop set to raise prices

An unexpectedly sharp decline in the European apple crop is likely to mean substantially higher prices in the shops this autumn, as much as a quarter up on last year, (Our Agriculture Correspondent writes).

However, Mr Dick Waidling, chief executive of the Apple and Pear Development Council, said that supplies should still be enough to meet demands.

Quoting authoritative German sources, he forecast a 7 per cent drop in the British crop from 375,000 tonnes to 350,000 tonnes, but for the EEC as a whole, the fall was expected to be about 1 per cent, from 8,545,000 tonnes to 8,471,000 tonnes.

In contrast, pears were expected to be more plentiful.

From Arthur Osman, Birmingham

A woman aged 59 died earlier this month from a kidney illness which has affected 18 others, mainly children, in the Black Country, it was confirmed yesterday. The cause of death had been given as natural causes and she was buried on August 11.

An official of the West Midlands regional health authority said: "This is not a notifiable disease and doctors not realizing that it was present in the community might not have linked other deaths with it."

Mrs Margaret McCart, of West Bromwich, was admitted to Sandwell district general hospital on July 20 and died after kidney failure on August 3. She had suffered from severe sickness, and diarrhoea, the initial symptoms of haemolytic uraemic syndrome. Some sufferers had been thought to have gastro-enteritis.

A girl aged two from Willenhall, West Midlands, died in hospital from the illness on August 5.

Six children are still detained in hospitals at Birmingham and Wolverhampton and the health authority said that two were still "poorly".

Mr John Maile, aged 17, of Stourport-on-Severn, Hereford and Worcester, was admitted to hospital on July 29. It was confirmed on Monday that he too was suffering from the illness. His condition was stable yesterday although he was still on a kidney dialysis machine.

Ex-RAF man in fight over citizenship

A man who has served in the Royal Air Force and has lived in Britain almost all of his life has been told that he does not qualify for a British passport because of a mistake by his father 13 years ago.

Mr Michael Regnard faces a prolonged battle with the Home Office over his claim that because he has a British birth certificate, he should not be expected to register as British because of a "departmental blunder" in 1972.

Mr Regnard, aged 25, a company director from Bath, says that when his father, who was born in Mauritius, registered himself as a British citizen after 14 years with the RAF, he was never told that his son should also be registered.

Born in a hospital at RAF Resting in West Germany before being flown to Britain a few months later, Mr Regnard has always considered himself a United Kingdom citizen and says that he finds the sudden questioning of his nationality "totally disgraceful".

The problem arose when Mr Regnard applied for a 10-year passport to enable him to go on holiday with his wife Judith. The passport office in Newport, Gwent, queried his application. The Home Office said yesterday that Mr Regnard would be allowed to return to Britain after his two-week holiday in Spain, which begins on September 17, but he would have to sign a registration form if he was to be considered a British subject.

● Mr Nabi Nickman, aged 22, an Iranian student at Brunel Technical College, Bristol, who was imprisoned for 16 months after his visa expired in April last year has been told by the Home Office that he can stay to complete his studies.

Home loans surge as money rolls in again

By Lorna Bourke

Lending for house purchase is surging ahead with Halifax Building Society, the biggest in Britain, reporting home loans up from 74,000 in the first half of 1982/83 to 100,000 for the same period this year. In money terms, lending has increased from £1,320m to £1,955m - a rise of 48 per cent.

Loans for home improvements also rose significantly, topping £165m for the first half of this year compared with £115m for the same period in 1982/83.

Although lending has been running at record levels, money coming into the Halifax available for home buyers fell substantially from £1,035m to £885m for the first half of this year.

That mirrors the experience of the industry as a whole though figures released yesterday by the Building Societies Association disclose a dramatic turnaround in the societies' fortunes after the July increase in rates.

Money is pouring into the societies once again, and net receipts for July at £739m were much higher than expected - more than double the June total of £319m. In addition the societies raised £200m from the wholesale money markets in an attempt to reduce the lengthening queues.

"For the first time for many months building societies attracted sufficient funds in July to meet the underlying demand for mortgage finance," Mr Richard Weir, secretary general of the Building Societies Association, said. "This does not mean, however, that mortgage queues will disappear overnight as there is still a backlog of demand built up during the first half of the year when societies were operating with uncompetitive interest rates."

Chase girl died of head injury, coroner told

Elizabeth Nicholson, aged nine, who ran into the path of a car while being chased by a gang of boys, died of a skull fracture and brain injury, a coroner was told at Newcastle upon Tyne yesterday.

She died in Newcastle General Hospital on Monday, three days after the accident on the A19 near Seaham, co Durham.

The inquest on the girl, of Malvern Crescent, Seaham, was opened yesterday and adjourned to a date to be fixed.

Charity walker found safe

A long-distance charity walker, Mr Anthony Lancaster, missing for three days in Snowdonia, was found safe and well yesterday.

Mr Lancaster, aged 24, of Weston Rhyn, Oswestry, Shropshire, telephoned police from the Pen-y-Pass youth hostel near Capel Curig, Gwynedd, apparently unaware that a big search had been launched. Mr Lancaster had camped out on the mountainsides to rest after feeling unwell.

Lynx to return to Pyrenees

Two five-year-old lynx from Ribet Zoo, Matlock, Derbyshire, are to be released next month in the French Pyrenees where the animal became extinct 100 years ago.

Man accused of girl's murder

Robert John France, aged 27, of Deer Park Road, Langston, near Bourne, Lincolnshire, was sent for trial accused of murder after appearing at a special court in Bourne yesterday.

He will appear at either Lincoln Crown Court or Nottingham Crown Court charged with murdering Gillian Lesley Atkins, aged 14, of Brownlow Drive, Deeping St James, on or about April 4.

Police warning to missing wife's friends

Former male friends of Mrs Diane Jones, the missing wife of an Essex doctor, will be contacted by police if they do not come forward, Det. Supt. Michael Ainsley, who is heading the search for her, said yesterday.

Mr Ainsley said an undisclosed number of men who were "personally involved" with Mrs Jones had not yet made themselves known. They could provide crucial information.

She disappeared on July 23 after visiting a local public house with her husband. Mrs Jones is reported to have gone missing on several previous occasions. "I have given up all hope of finding her alive," Mr Ainsley said.

He indicated that police had a list of her former men friends. Appealing to them, he said: "I am in a position to identify certain people who have not yet come forward."

"I would ask them to contact us in order to save my officers the time and trouble of finding them. I will treat all information with the discretion it deserves."

Businessman imposed 'fine' for parking

After more than one hundred drivers had parked their cars uninvited in Brian Mills' forecourt he decided to remove the windscreen wiper blades from a car and return them to the driver only on payment of a £10 "fine". Croydon magistrates were told yesterday.

Mr Mills, aged 49, a property developer, of York House, Sydenham Road, Croydon, admitted unlawfully damaging a Datsun car belonging to Mrs Patricia Atkins.

He told the court that over the past four years he had counted more than 100 cars parked in his forecourt. He had six parking spaces in front of his front garden which were allocated to tenants living in his property.

Giving him a conditional discharge for twelve months, Mr Ainsley, the magistrate, said Mills had adopted an inadvisable course of action. "But we have full sympathy with you," he added.

Business booms for heatwave suppliers

The enterprising travel agent who offered a week away from the heat in Iceland recently had no takers. Indeed, demand for last-minute holidays in the Mediterranean remains high, despite the exceptional weather throughout much of Britain.

But there are some people who would leap at a week's holiday anywhere. For many companies, the very hot summer has meant very hard work.

A dozen workers on Xpelair's production line have agreed to forgo the firm's traditional two-week summer holiday to meet demand boosted by the sustained heat.

They make a small desk-top fan. Launched this spring, it has already exceeded its sales targets for the year, selling 20,000 units so far.

Xpelair also imports larger office fans, and reported that overseas suppliers have used up all their stocks this summer because of British demand twice as great as usual.

People have also been seeking ventilation on the move. A leading maker of sun roofs for cars, Britax Weather-shield, said that the good weather in July had stimulated demand to a level 30 per cent higher than last year.

About 90,000 sun roofs will be sold in Britain this year, compared with fewer than 10,000 five years ago, and the heatwave has accelerated that trend.

Mr Eric Ainsworth, Britax's financial director, said: "It is our best summer by far." His workforce too has had to work extra shifts.

More people are taking to the road on bicycles. Mr Michael Dickinson, co-owner of the London Bicycle Company, the capital's largest retailer, recently had to close his main store at midday because the throng of shoppers had reached unmanageable proportions.

"We did three consecutive record weeks in July, surpassing even the trade and the tube strikes," Mr Dickinson said. "The staff has been run ragged." He now reports difficulty replacing depleted stocks.

Mr Roger Dear, director of sales at T. L. Raleigh, Britain's largest bicycle manufacturer, confirmed that the company was stretched to meet retail demand for some models. "It is an exceptional summer," he said.

If it had poured with rain, it would have pleased the television companies. Researchers calculate that a rise of just one degree in mean monthly temperatures causes a measurable drop in television audiences, and July's figures certainly bear that out. Independent television ratings fell 17 per cent in July compared with May, while last year, which had a mediocre summer, the fall was only 11.5 per cent.

The big screen has fared better. "Despite the weather, admissions are considerably higher this summer than last," according to Mr Peter Howard-Williams, national sales controller at Rank Screen Advertising.

The film industry has launched some strong productions into the normally quiet summer months, spurred partly by the opening of Star Wars III, brought forward from the autumn to thwart the video pirates.

People on their holidays have been able to choose from titles such as Oceanography and Superman III. "There is only so much you can do at a resort. People often take in a film in the evening," Mr Howard-Williams said.

The more traditional seaside entertainments are also attracting the crowds, according to Scarborough's director of tourism, Mr Donald Waterman. All four shows at the resort are doing excellent business, he said.

The more visitors to the resort, the more people are potentially available for indoor pastimes, even in good weather, he pointed out, and there are certainly more visitors since the hot weather started.

The good weather seems to have prompted people to take more holidays than they planned, and not just in Britain.

The Late Traveller, a company specializing in last-minute overseas trips, said that demand was at present 50 per cent higher than in August last year.

Golden Rail, British Rail's all-in travel subsidiary, said that there had been four times more bookings this summer than last for short breaks. Extra staff have been engaged to cope.

People returning from holiday often find they have an overgrown lawn to mow, but this year the problem will not be so prevalent. The hot dry weather is not good for grass, and not at all good for lawnmower sales. Quacast said that present demand was about one twentieth that of the year's peak weeks.

But the dry grass has meant good news for makers of decongestants and hay-fever remedies. Boots said that sales of such products were 15 per cent higher this summer than last, due to the consistently high pollen count.

Police escort football fans

More than 100 supporters of Middlesbrough Football Club were escorted home by the police after a match with Hull City on Monday night. Their two coaches, which were damaged on the way to the match, left without them because the drivers said they would not risk further incidents.

The police persuaded Hull Corporation to make two coaches available and two officers travelled in each vehicle. Seven supporters were arrested.

Stowaways to fly home

Five Algerian stowaways who came to Britain by mistake on a cargo ship are to be flown home at the expense of the Algerian Government.

The Home Office said yesterday that the five men, held in Gloucester jail, would return on the first available Algerian aircraft. They had thought that the ship was going to Spain.

Nkomo returns from exile but refuses to engage in controversy

From Stephen Taylor, Harare

Mr Joshua Nkomo came home yesterday to a reception which was in stark contrast to the last time he returned from exile. Less than 100 supporters gathered at the airport to chant and sing on his arrival after five months in Britain, compared with an estimated 120,000 who welcomed him back in January, 1980.

Mr Nkomo, who expressed his delight at being home, said his first public task would be to appear in Parliament today to challenge a motion by the ruling Zanu (PF) Party to have his seat declared vacant.

At a press conference later, at which he dodged and parried questions on the sensitive issues of Matabeleland and guerrilla violence, he spoke of a need for a comprehensive solution to Zimbabwe's problems, but was not specific.

Spokesmen for his Patriotic Front party claimed that the low-key welcome, both at the airport and at his Harare home, was by design and intended to prevent incidents.

Mr Nkomo was accompanied on the overnight flight from London by Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, the Minister of Home Affairs, generally seen as an opponent of compromise over the rift between their respective parties. Mr Nkomo said he had had no contact with Dr Ushewokunze in London but that they had shaken hands and joked on the aircraft.

He spent more than an hour in the airport terminal being questioned by customs officials and by immigration officers about his unconventional exit from Zimbabwe on March 8 when he fled across the border to Botswana claiming his life was in danger. On emerging he was surrounded by about 60 ululating women and men chanting "Zanu" the rallying cry of the Patriotic Front.

Mr Nkomo, smiling broadly and carrying the walking stick which has become his symbol, was guided to a car and driven to his second home in Harare's Highfields suburb where about 200 supporters were assembled.

The last time Mr Nkomo assembled a press conference at the house on January 29 it was to disclose massacres of his supporters by the Fifth Brigade in Matabeleland.

Yesterday he was treading cautiously and his statements were of a far less dramatic nature. He emphasized it was vital that Zimbabweans be ready and willing to discuss their problems and find solutions, but he declined to define what he thought the problems were or how they could be tackled.

He confirmed that he had written to Mr Robert Mugabe, the Prime Minister, while away, but said he had received no reply. Nevertheless he thought his absence had provided a necessary period for passions to cool.

"We must be prepared to sacrifice our face if necessary for the good of the country," Mr Nkomo said. The Government has said that the motion to strip Mr Nkomo of his seat because he has missed 21 consecutive days of parliament will proceed.

Even if the motion is approved Mr Nkomo is virtually certain to stay on as an MP because under the Lancaster House constitution the Patriotic Front, which holds 20 seats in the 100-seat assembly, can nominate whoever it wishes to fill those seats.

Mugabe acts to curb corruption

From Our Correspondent, Harare

Alarmed at indications of a growth in corruption and misuse of public funds, the Zimbabwe Government is to amend anti-corruption legislation to provide stiffer penalties for the guilty, including forfeiture of property to the state.

Since Mr Robert Zvinoira, the former Zimbabwe High Commissioner to London, was recalled earlier this year over disclosures that he had paid $585,000 against Government instructions for a London mansion a number of such incidents have come to light.

Among those implicated are eight officials who have been charged with stealing aid meant for drought relief, and the former Secretary General of the Zimbabwe Red Cross Society who has appeared in court over an alleged $230,000 illegal foreign currency deal.

Bigger fish are still at large.

Earlier this year Mr Robert Mugabe, the Prime Minister, attacked avarice in local government officials and castigated members of his Cabinet who he said had acquired huge property interests since independence.

In the forefront of investigations into misuse of public funds is the Parliamentary Public Accounts Committee which in a recent indictment of the financial conduct of the Ministry of Youth, Sport and Recreation implicated Mr George Rutanhire, the Deputy Minister, who accepted a £3,800 loan from a property dealer after the Ministry bought a farm from him at a price twice its assessed value.

The same committee has criticised the Ministry of Defence for spending £25m over the past five years which has been unaccounted for. The most spectacular case of corruption involves Mr Patrick Kumbayi, the former Mayor of Gweru, who was suspended from office in March and has since been expelled from the ruling party in which he once wielded some influence.

Mr Kumbayi, who spent more than £65,000 of council funds on a mayoral Mercedes Benz and gold chains of office, was accused by the Government in June of a catalogue of misdemeanours including directing council contracts to his own businesses and putting more than 100 of his supporters on the city payroll as a personal police force. For these and other matters he is now under police investigation.

Although such cases are disturbing, not least to senior members of the Government, independent observers take it as a healthy sign that they are coming to light and in most cases action is being taken.

"America is the lion's heart of democracy. We have an obligation to give that democracy a voice, even an occasional roar". - President Reagan

Reagan men may take lie tests

From Christopher Thomas, Washington

The FBI wants to give lie-detector tests to several senior figures as part of its investigation into how Mr Ronald Reagan's 1980 presidential campaign got hold of documents from the Carter White House.

According to The Washington Post, the FBI is seeking the Justice Department's permission to give such tests to Mr William Casey, Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, and Mr James Baker, the White House Chief of Staff, as well as about 10 other people.

The purpose, it is said, is to resolve inconsistencies that have arisen during the investigation. Mr Baker has said he received Carter briefing papers for the 1980 presidential campaign from Mr Casey, but Mr Casey says he does not recall seeing the papers.

Mr Casey, who directed the 1980 Reagan campaign, has denied there was an intelligence operation seeking information and documents from inside the Carter campaign team.

The Washington Post yesterday quoted an investigator as saying that "a strong, unavoidable inference" that such an operation was receiving information from somebody working for President Jimmy Carter was contained in a memorandum to Mr Casey from a Reagan aide.

After a campaign-style speech-making tour, President Reagan arrived by helicopter at his ranch in Santa Barbara, California, yesterday for a holiday.

His holiday was delayed a day or so that he could talk to war veterans about his Central America policy, his main foreign affairs preoccupation.

John Glenn, leading contender for the Democratic presidential nomination, appeared later on the same platform, much to the chagrin of Mr Reagan's aides.

Peking gives Hongkong breather until 1997

regain control of Hongkong before 1997

Peking (Reuters) - Mr Hu Yaobang, the Communist Party leader, has made it clear that China is prepared to wait until 1997 to recover sovereignty over Hongkong.

He told a Japanese newspaper delegation yesterday that China did not recognize the treaties under which Britain governs the territory, but he said Peking intended to recover sovereignty on July 1, 1997, the day after one of the Anglo-Chinese agreements expires.

The recovery will be no sooner or later than that date, a day after the 1988 treaty will expire. (This is the treaty under which Britain leased Hongkong's New Territories for 99 years.)

"We simply respect consequences of history, although we cannot approve the unfair treaty," Western diplomats said this was the strongest sign so far that Peking does not propose to

Russians refuse to hand back war criminal

Moscow (AFP) - Mr Yermak Lukianov, a Soviet-born Belgian citizen sentenced to death here on July 8 for war crimes, will not be handed back to the Belgian authorities, Tass said yesterday.

Mr Lukianov, aged 63, was arrested while on holiday here with his family in 1968 and spent 15 years in a Soviet psychiatric institution before being released last year and subsequently tried.

Tass listed Second World War crimes for which the military court in Elista, capital of the Kalmyk autonomous republic northwest of the Caspian Sea, sentenced Mr Lukianov to death.

The article was the first reference by the Soviet press agency to Mr Lukianov, who left the Soviet Union in 1944 and became a Belgian citizen in 1967, shortly before his arrest. Mr Lukianov was a wartime officer in the Red Army before being captured by the Nazis and changing sides to fight for them in German-occupied regions of the Soviet Union and in Poland, Tass said.

"The circumstances of Lukianov's betrayal and of the crimes he committed in the Soviet Union and Poland are recorded in a 45-volume dossier containing documentary proof of his guilt."

In Belgium, the Foreign Minister, Mr Leo Tindemans, said that a consular agreement between Belgium and the Soviet Union stipulated that each be notified in the event of a trial of one of its citizens.

Moscow (Reuters) - Aleksander Korol, a Byelorussian who collaborated with the Germans during the Second World War, has been sentenced to death, Tass reported. Soviet authorities had been hunting Korol, accused of being involved in a massacre, for 40 years.

Taps and tempers run short in Spain

From Harry Debelius, Madrid

In an area where tension prevailed over the distribution of diminishing supply of water, after more than three years of drought, some farmers have been taking more than their authorized share from canals and resorting to such tactics as irrigation under cover of darkness or diverting water from other farms.

On August 3, more than 2,000 inhabitants of the farming village of Dolores, near Murcia, overpowered a small detachment of the Civil Guard keeping watch over an irrigation canal and with a power shovel scooped out a hole in the side of the canal thus diverting water to their farms.

The Oyo state government radio, reporting on the tension in Ibadan, punctuated its programme with a song by the popular Nigerian pop star, Fela Kuti, entitled "Danger, Danger."

Overall returns gave the NPN control of eight of 12 states declared so far in the first elections organized by civilians in 20 years.

Newspaper reports said that tension was rising in several parts of the country as the NPN won in opposition strongholds.

The violence during the governorship elections contrasted with the presidential polls, in which peaceful voting surprised many Nigerians.

The President's party also took control of the UPN in the state of Bendel. It won in eastern Anambra, where Mr Jim Nwobodo, the outgoing governor, of the Nigerian People's Party rejected the outcome.

In northern Kano, the ruling People's Redemption Party confirmed its control of the state, defeating Mr Abubakar Rimi, the former governor, who ran on a NPP ticket.

The NPN gained from the collapse of the Great Nigerian People's Party to win in the north-eastern state of Borno.

The latest results also showed the NPN in firm control of Mr Shagari's home state of Sokoto where the party's candidate polled more than three million votes, about 96 per cent of the total ballot.

Letter from Trieste

Castle of learning with a purple past

Once more, Duino is to be subjected to foreign occupation. Those who served over 30 years ago under Generals Harding, Airey or Winterton in the HQ administering the so-called Free Territory of Trieste will remember the wooden hut, the trestle tables, the British Army's ubiquitous mugs of tea and the officers' mess in the castle up the road.

For me to come back had something of the atmosphere of Bridgehead Trieste, although the castle has long been returned to its owners. My camp bed in a castle annex used to stand in a corner of a room that is being redecorated to become the headmaster's drawing room.

For Duino will open in September as home of the United World College of the Adriatic, the first group presided over by the Prince of Wales to be situated outside the English speaking world. "Village campus" is the description of the headmaster, David Sutcliffe, previously in charge of the College of the Atlantic, in Wales.

About 60 students will live in the castle annex, which is being given a face-lift with the installation of parquet floors and marble-walled showers. But most, more than 100, will be put up in guest houses in the village. The old village school, being converted into modern classrooms, is still a builder's site but, as usual in Italy, most things will probably fall into place at the last moment.

It would be difficult to find a more cosmopolitan location. Three cultures meet here, Italian, Slav and Germanic. Most of Duino's 1,150 inhabitants are Slovenes, they call it Devina - and the village is dominated, on a cliff overlooking the sea, by the castle of the Principe di Torre A Tasso. He is better known as the Prince of Thaur and Taxis, whose family instituted postal services in Central Europe long before the penny blacks of Victorian England.

The mayor, Signor Albino Skerk, is a Slovene communist. He has, to quote Mr Sutcliffe, given "wonderful support" to the project for the college and is on its board.

The staff have just spent a cramped year lodged temporarily in a hotel on the coast towards Trieste with a first intake of 17 and 18-year-olds from 32 countries as far apart as Argentina, Zimbabwe and China. Scholarship funded and non-fee paying, the college runs two year pre-university courses, and will get regularly into its stride in a few weeks time.

The project was first mooted in 1971, but after the Friuli earthquake of 1976, Mr Sutcliffe says, "We really thought it was dead and buried". It nevertheless came about thanks to the Friuli-Venezia Giulia regional government's support.

The area abounds in literary associations, classical and modern. Virgil, Livy and Strabo mention the Tinsavo river, which reemerges a couple of miles away after mysterious underground meanderings in Yugoslavia. The Austrian poet Rainer Maria Rilke conceived his Duino elegies in the castle and published them in 1922, the same year as James Joyce published Ulysses, conceived in Trieste.

But all this was remote from the villagers, whose fathers remembered better the artillery bombardments of the First World War, or the prohibition under Fascism to use their language or their surnames. It was at Duino the Archduke Franz Ferdinand slept before departure in 1914 for Sarajevo and assassination.

After the Second World War, the castle was the scene of a virtual ultimatum from the British to Marshal Tito's chief of staff. It will be a new experience for the villagers to be directly involved in an experiment directed towards international understanding rather than international tension.

Superpower row over second boy

From Mohsin Ali, Washington

Moscow (Reuters) - The Soviet Union has protested to the United States over the questioning of a teenage Soviet boy who was about to fly home from Washington, Tass reported yesterday.

A Note passed from the Soviet Embassy in Washington to the State Department described the incident, involving the son of a Tass correspondent, as a provocation. It accused the United States authorities of trying to persuade the boy to stay in America.

According to reports from Washington, the boy was questioned by officials trying to locate the 16-year-old son of a senior Soviet diplomat who wrote to President Reagan saying he wanted to stay.

Tass said the son of its correspondent Mr Vyacheslav Kukharevich had been trying to board an aircraft at Dulles Airport with his family when he was twice interrogated by immigration officials and FBI agents.

The American officials had "flagrantly tried to talk Kukharevich's 15-year-old son into staying in the United States rather than returning to the Soviet Union."

Tass made no reference to the case of the diplomats son, Andrei Berezikov, and there has been no mention of it at all in the Soviet media so far.

Tass said the case of the Tass correspondent's son showed "that a systematic provocation campaign is being conducted against Soviet people working in Washington, interfering in the normal functioning of Soviet agencies."

United States police have been watching the homes of Soviet diplomats to ensure no attempt is made to smuggle the Andrei Berezikov out of the country against his will.

Relatives go to memory loss tourist

Washington - Relatives of

Mantis Gassianus, aged 24, who is in hospital in Portland, Oregon, with almost total loss of memory, are to join him from England and Australia within a day or two (Christopher Thomas writes).

The hospital yesterday confirmed his identity beyond doubt. Mr Gassianus, who comes from Melbourne, had been in England and was hitchhiking through the United States when the car in which he was travelling crashed.

When he regained consciousness he thought his name was David Miller. It is believed he is of Lithuanian descent although a language test was inconclusive.

Rash climbers die in Alps

Grindelwald (Reuters) - Since the beginning of June 64 mountaineers have been killed in the Swiss Alps, 23 of them this month, police said. Most deaths appeared to be caused by recklessness.

Five died in the Valais over the weekend, two of them Frenchmen climbing the Matterhorn; a West German died on Mont Blanc; and two others, a Frenchman and a German, died on the same mountain. Rescuers gave up looking for another German missing since his companion fell to his death on the Eiger here.

Buried alive

Freetown (Reuters) - About 50 miners are feared to have died in a mining accident in eastern Sierra Leone, the Freetown Daily Mail said. They were buried alive when a huge boulder caved in last week on a mining site belonging to the National Diamond Co near Yengema.

Flag insulted

Madrid - A town councillor in San Sebastian, Señor Herri Batasuna, who helped Basque extremists take down the Spanish flag from the town hall on Monday was arrested. The flag had only hours earlier been hoisted to mark the city's annual fiesta.

Father says he would have killed

From Ray Kennedy, Johannesburg

Mr Harry Mullocks, father of Mrs Maureen Smith, the London woman sentenced to death in South Africa for the murder of her husband, was prepared to kill himself if it seemed the only way of ending his daughter's unhappy marriage, according to an affidavit submitted to the Appeal Court in Bloemfontein yesterday.

The affidavit, made in London by Mr Mullocks, who refused to give evidence at his daughter's trial in Johannesburg, formed the basis to an application by defence counsel for his evidence to be taken on commission in London and the trial reopened.

Five judges are hearing Mrs Smith's appeal against her conviction and sentence for the murder of her husband, Roger Smith, in Johannesburg last July. They are also hearing the appeals against their death sentences of the two black assassins hired to carry out the killing, Jack Ramagane and David Mnguni.

In the affidavit, Mr Mullocks said he twice refused to assist his daughter's legal advisers, at first because he was warned he might be arrested in South Africa and tried as an accomplice, and on the second occasion after being told he could face prosecution in Britain. He was convinced then that his daughter would not be sentenced to death.

On the day of the murder, he said, his daughter telephoned him and said she needed 10,000 rands (about £6,000). It was obvious this was to pay the killers, and he indicated he would arrange with a Durban bank to release the money to his granddaughter, Miss Karen Wood.

Mr Mullocks said he believed that unless something was done to get rid of Mr Smith, who refused to give his wife a divorce, he was also furious over Mr Smith's threats to blackmail him with photocopies of documents taken from his safe.

"It is clear that I wanted Smith to be disposed of," the affidavit stated. "He was causing my daughter a great deal of unhappiness, and it was quite clear that he would not give his wife her freedom in the conventional way."

Later, he said, it seemed more practical if someone in South Africa was employed to get rid of Mr Smith.

Mrs Smith and her fellow-murderers were not at the Appeal Court yesterday. Mr Mnguni, it was said, was a poor man and the offer of 10,000 rands to carry out the murder had seemed a fortune. Mr Ramagane had been threatened with losing his job as the Smith family chauffeur if he did not follow instructions.

Israel gives Lebanon unwritten ultimatum handover of the Chouf to the Lebanese Army but there was no doubt about what was on his mind.

"The Lebanese Government," he said, "should be putting greater emphasis on trying to reach a political accommodation between Christian and Druze communities in the Chouf and coordinating the future redeployment of the Lebanese Army units with us in the light of our planned evacuation of the area... We cannot make the movement of our troops contingent on arrangements that may or may not be made in the area."

By far his harshest words were reserved for the Syrians. President Assad, he said, was a dictator. "Like many dictators in the world past and present (he) is intent on military confrontations in order to strengthen his position at home. We had that kind of experience before with the Syrians so I would not rule out the possibility that the Syrians would be looking for a military confrontation."

He added: "I assure you they would be beaten very soundly if there was to be a new confrontation between the Israeli and Syrian armies."

Meanwhile, Beirut airport reopened yesterday to commercial airlines after being closed for six days.

TEL AVIV: The partial withdrawal of the Israeli Army from a 600 square kilometre area of occupied Lebanon, including the Chouf mountains, is due to begin "in a matter of days," according to Lieutenant-General Moshe Levy, the new Chief of Staff of the Israel Defence Forces (Christopher Walker writes).

Rag-tag army prepares to defend Ndjamena against rebel advance

From Joseph Althright, Cox News Service

Massakori, Chad - At a former French military post 90 miles north of the capital, a rag-tag unit of Chadian soldiers languidly prepared to stop any Libyan advance.

"If the Libyans come, we will throw them back to the base where they came from," said Tchou Yaya, aged 30, a soldier in camouflage fatigues and rubber sandals. Thirty-five strong, these men of the Brigade Militaire de Massakori defended one of the two sizable towns between the Libyan tanks and Chad's capital, Ndjamena.

Chad's frontline army, or what remains of it, is based 196 miles farther north at a small desert village called Salal. Also at Salal is a small detachment of French paratroopers.

Libyan and Libyan-backed rebel forces are reportedly regrouping after they seized the town of Faya Largeau, forcing the Chadian defenders to withdraw to Salal, 280 miles to the south.

Here at Massakori, the brigade commander, Salah Hilli, a wizened former guerrilla fighter who says he is 30, keeps a loaded grenade launcher behind the desk of his mud-brick office. As he showed two visiting correspondents around the dusty courtyard of his garrison, half a dozen rifles of uncertain vintage could be seen propped against a tree.

The commander was bitter about the Libyan victory in the north. "Libya, it is rich from oil, that is why they have the tanks," he said. He picked up a pinch of dusty sand and let it drop. "The land, that is our father and our mother. We are Chadians. For our country we are ready to die."

Muhammad Hadje, a 15-year-old soldier with a Kalashnikov rifle hanging from his shoulder, watched as his commander was being interviewed.

Through an Arabic-speaking interpreter, a reporter asked the young soldier whether he, too, was ready to face the Libyans. Seemingly not to understand, he said nothing. The commander repeated the question. When the young soldier again said nothing, he slapped him sharply across the face. "I am ready to fight," Hadje said finally.

Massakori is a sprawling town of one-storey mud-walled houses, with a population estimated at 10,000 by one French doctor.

On Sunday, when the journalists arrived, an ostrich stood under a tree about 50 yards from the commander's office. In the centre of the town, several hundred yards away, there is a large open market-place.

It was market day, and the place was packed with several thousand Chadians, along with groaning camels, goats, chickens, motorcycles and Japanese pick-up trucks.

Muhammad, a student, was asked if he expected the Libyans to reach Massakori. "I hope it will not be," he said. "I am capable for my country."

Until now, the 100 or so journalists covering the Chadian war have been unable to leave the city limits of Ndjamena. On Sunday, two journalists paid a lorry driver to take them to Massakori and back. There were no difficulties except for a puncture and three broken springs. Credentials issued by the Chadian Information Ministry were accepted without question at half a dozen road blocks along the way.

The trip along this main road to northern Chad made it evident that President Hissene Habre's defences are extremely thin in the region just north of the capital. Not a single military unit was seen between Ndjamena and Massakori. There were a few soldiers at road blocks but no sign of heavy weapons.

In the town of Massakori, 49 miles north of Ndjamena, there is a small brigade headquarters where a few soldiers were serving as policemen. Inside, the brigade secretary, Ahmed Djidi Ali Kadir, aged 23, said people were fearful at the thought of Libyan soldiers reaching Massakori.

The 180-mile round trip between Ndjamena and Massakori took 11 hours over rutted dusty roads that were interrupted by occasional tarred, but potholed stretches.

Promise to keep the Rand Daily Mail open

From Our Correspondent Johannesburg

A commitment to continue publication of the Johannesburg Rand Daily Mail, South Africa's leading anti-government and campaigning newspaper, has been given by its owners, South African Associated Newspapers.

The RDM, as it is known, is running at a huge loss and there has been growing speculation that it would be forced to close or abandon its intensely political format and become a financial daily. Mr Clive Kinley, managing director of the newspaper group, said in a statement published on the front page yesterday: "The closure of the Mail is not an option it (the board) will consider. Nor will it allow the character of the newspaper to be changed."

But he also announced that from October 4 its business news section would be carried in a separate supplement and that "refinements" would be introduced gradually to the general news pages. The Mail's circulation of 118,000 copies a day, is facing stiff competition from The Citizen, the newspaper launched with secret funds by the now defunct Department of Information to counter the Mail's vigorous anti-apartheid line.

The Citizen has steadily closed on the Mail and has an audited circulation of 2,000 copies daily, claiming to have a higher percentage of white readers. The Mail, published a special edition for blacks which The Citizen claims accounts for half its daily circulation.

Mr Kinley's statement indicates that the Mail will continue to cater specially for its black readers despite arguments that a large black readership discourages advertisers who feel the best returns are still to be found among higher income whites.

The assurance that the Mail will not change its character will also be a comfort to the official opposition, the Progressive Federal Party which the newspaper has championed since its inception. South African Associated Newspapers yesterday reported a 39 percent drop in earnings for the first six months of the year and said that the Mail would record "a heavy loss" this year and next.

But the English-language press is faring better on the whole than Afrikaans-language newspapers. In Johannesburg, Die Transvaler, the mouthpiece of the National Party in the Transvaal, has been forced to abandon the battle for survival and has merged with two Pretoria evening newspapers.

Why Honecker is so welcome

Warsaw (Reuters) - Herr

Erich Honecker, the East German head of state, began a three day visit yesterday as part of a process of rehabilitating Poland in the eyes of its Soviet block allies after three years of political upheaval.

His arrival coincided with the announcement of new measures in Gdansk to prevent demonstrations after two days of protests by workers supporting the banned trade union Solidarity.

The East German leader was warmly greeted by General Wojciech Jaruzelski, the Polish Prime Minister and party leader.

Herr Honecker, who keeps a tight grip on East German internal security, was one of the most outspoken critics of Solidarity and of past compromises by the Polish Government.

Western diplomats see his visit, the first to Poland by a Soviet block head of state since martial law was lifted last month, as setting a seal of approval on General Jaruzelski's handling of the Solidarity challenge.

The two leaders began talks yesterday. Polish newspapers said his visit opened a new stage in relations with East Germany.

The party newspaper Trybuna Ludu said Herr Honecker was coming at a time when Western states were trying to exploit Poland's internal problems to undermine bonds among socialist countries.

The Deputy Prime Minister Mr Mieczyslaw Rakowski, in an interview on US television on Monday, ruled out talks with Mr Lech Walesa, leader of Solidarity as demanded by a secret shipyard workers' group, which called for a go-slow if talks did not start by next week.

Meetings banned: Poland yesterday banned all unauthorized meetings in Gdansk until September 15 (AFP reports).

The move comes after Mr Walesa flung down the gauntlet to the Government on Monday by leading some 500 Gdansk workers to the monument commemorating the worker-victims of the 1970 riots.

He also warned the Government to start negotiations with Solidarity, to be attended by the Catholic church, on respecting the 1980 Gdansk accords or face a demonstration in Gdansk on August 22.

The ban on meetings extends beyond the third anniversary on August 31 of the Gdansk accords, in which the Government agreed to 21 demands by striking workers. It has been used as a rallying point for support by Mr Walesa.

Pakistani police fire into air to halt riot

From Hasan Akhtar Islamabad

Police fired into the air yesterday at Dadu, a town about 200 miles north of Karachi, to break up a crowd, estimated at about 2,000 people, which had attacked two banks, a telephone exchange and Government vehicles. Several people are believed to have been injured and some arrested.

Police are also reported to have fired shots to quell a jail riot in Nawabshah, in Sind. Nawabshah's principal political figure, Mr Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi, a former chief minister of Sind, was arrested on Monday in Karachi for defying a ban on political activity.

In Hyderabad, another important city of Sind about 100 miles north of Karachi, medical students boycotted their classes and demonstrated outside their college with slogans against martial law and demanding the release of Miss Benazir Bhutto, daughter of the executed Prime Minister, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, who has been in detention since March 1981, and other detained opposition leaders.

Police are also reported to have fired tear gas shells in Tharparkar, in Sind, to break up a protest rally. In Rawalpindi several hundred people turned up on a busy road yesterday to applaud six political workers who defied the ban on public demonstrations and courted arrest.

Press reports say that protests continued in Karachi for the third day yesterday when some opposition leaders defied prohibitory orders and held a demonstration. Similar incidents were reported from other towns.

Several people including a child were injured in a bomb explosion on Monday in Lahore, the Punjab provincial capital.

Sri Lankan tea workers seek safety

Colombo (Reuters) - Thousands of people of Indian origin in Sri Lanka, victims of last month's racial riots, are seeking assurances of protection from the Sri Lankan Government.

The Ceylon Workers Congress (CWC), the main trade union of the people who work in the island's tea plantations, has sought a meeting with President Jayawardene to discuss measures to enable them to live in Sri Lanka "with dignity, safety and security as equals with the rest of the population".

Mr Savumani Moorthy Thondaman, the CWC president, who is also Minister of Rural Industrial Development, told Reuters he would have to advise people of Indian origin, including those who had Sri Lankan citizenship, to go back to India if the Government was unable to give them adequate protection.

Indian Tamils, now numbering around 825,000, are the descendants of people brought from southern India by the British more than 100 years ago to work in tea and rubber plantations in the Central Highlands.

They form a separate group from the Sri Lanka Tamils, who live mainly in the northern and eastern provinces and are demanding a separate state.

Sri Lanka and India signed agreements in 1964 and 1974 under which 375,000 "stateless Indians" in the island would be granted Sri Lankan citizenship and 600,000 would be repatriated to India. Up to the end of last year, 406,000 people had been repatriated and Sri Lanka had given citizenship to 176,000.

The CWC said in a statement that a concerted attempt had been made to destroy the houses and belongings of Indians of Indian origin during the riots.

Meanwhile, Sri Lanka, its image as a peaceful paradise, has been shattered by the riots, has launched a drive to attract tourists again.

Officials said there were about 10,000 visitors in the country when the ethnic violence started.

During the troubles, Sri Lanka suspended all charter flights bringing tourists, and advised diplomatic missions and tourist offices abroad not to encourage visitors to come to the island.

Jayewardene pleads: President Jayewardene has described the riots as a crisis not only of political and economic decline but also a crisis of civilization (our correspondent writes).

Insurgents pound Kabul fortress guerrillas staged a five-hour attack at the weekend on a Soviet-manned fortress overlooking Kabul, Western diplomats said here yesterday.

Islamabad (Reuters) - Afghan

They quoted their embassies as saying the attack, which lasted late into Saturday night, was one of the largest seen in the capital since the Soviet intervention in 1979.

The guerrillas also pounded the Radio Afghanistan building and the Mikorayon residential complex, where many Soviet officials and Afghan Communist leaders live, they said.

"The diplomats had no reports of casualties in the Bala Hissar fortress, which was hit by mortar and rocket fire from three separate points in the city, but they said smoke was still rising from the thick-walled compound on Sunday morning.

During the shelling, Afghan troops beamed spotlights and fired tracer bullets at guerrilla positions on a mountain near the fortress. The lower slopes are crowded with shanty-towns.

There were no details of casualties in Mikorayon, where blocks of flats and local security police headquarters were also targets. Radio Afghanistan was hit by mortar fire, but did not appear much damaged.

The diplomats said travellers arriving from the south were subject to frequent searches and road blocks, suggesting that the Government may have suspected guerrilla activity that night.

Two Afghan Communist Party members were shot and killed near the police academy on August 9, presumably by guerrillas, they added.

In another attack on the outskirts of Kabul, about a dozen men from the Defence of the Revolution militia were captured by guerrillas.

The village of Ghazni, near the resort town of Paghman, was bombed on Thursday night and Kabul residents reported that parts were still smoking and on fire the next morning.

deence of Tigré in northern Ethiopia.

A dozen foreigners, most of them working for the Save the Children Fund, were abducted in April from Korem, about 65 miles north of Jart, on the road from Addis Ababa to Asmara, the Eritrean capital. They were freed six weeks later after being taken across the Sudan border.

A spokesman at the Lanesme headquarters of Terre des Hommes said the organization had been in touch with the International Red Cross to seek the release of the Swiss.

The Ethiopian authorities, in line with their usual policy when "secessionist bandits" are involved, have made no comment.

Western shipping magazines, fearful of cutthroat competition from the Soviet merchant navy, may be comforted to know that it sometimes suffers from indiscipline, drunkenness and even the occasional mutiny.

According to Pravda, the recent murder of a merchant navy captain by his second mechanic on the Sea of Azov has lessons for the rest of the fleet.

Captain Levchenko was given the command of the Sabirabad two years ago. He was considered energetic, modest, friendly and communicative, except by Second Mechanic Grzhenko, who was "a born troublemaker".

On his previous ships, Pravda said, Grzhenko was constantly drunk or picking fights with fellow crew, and resented the fact that Captain Levchenko ran a tight ship.

Pravda reveals murder at sea

From Richard Owen, Moscow

The finger of suspicion pointed at Grzhenko, who at first denied everything but then admitted his guilt. He was cooking off watch, he said, when he spotted the captain and asked him to step on to the poop to talk things over.

Temper flared, and Grzhenko struck Captain Levchenko on the head several times with a pair of pliers before throwing him overboard.

Pravda said Grzhenko had been sentenced to death for murder, and accused the Azov shipping line of not paying enough attention to the selection and placing of personnel.

It said there were probably many more cases of drunken and insubordinate behaviour on board ship than came to light.

China to tighten controls on the sale of giant pandas and panda skins (Reuters reports).

In a letter to the Forestry Ministry, the secretariat of the Convention on Trade and Endangered Species of Wild Flora and Fauna expressed concern about reports that panda skins had been offered for sale by a company in Taiwan.

It said it had information that a panda skin was bought for $33,000 and imported into Japan.

Chinese to feed pandas as bamboo famine looms allotted 300,000 yuan (about $100,000) to help feed pandas threatened by famine because their staple food, the bamboo, is in flower.

The English-language China Daily said the decision was made by Dr Yang Zhong, the Forestry Minister, who oversees 90 per cent of China's nature reserves. The pandas are threatened by a natural phenomenon that occurs only once every 50 to 60 years - the flowering and withering of bamboo.

About 1,200 pandas live in 12 reserves in China, 10 of which are in Sichuan Province, which will get two-thirds of the money. The largest reserve, Wolong in the Qinling mountains, appears to be the most affected.

A Sichuan nature protection official, Mr Hu Tiejing, said he expected the problem to be at its worst next winter and spring. Bamboo, sugar cane and other food has been sent to the reserves, although officials have considered moving the pandas to other areas or to zoos. China Daily said another, less desirable solution would be to build farms in the reserves where the pandas would be cared for.

Some 150 pandas died in a similar catastrophe in Sichuan some years ago. The most severely affected reserve was Wanglang in the Minshan mountains where more than 90 per cent of the panda population died of starvation.

SPECTRUM

Mayor Edward Koch, the flamboyant politician who keeps the New York show on the road, is having a tougher time these days with his increasingly critical racial minorities. Trevor Fishlock reports on his struggle

You're not doing so good now, Ed...

New York It is very hot in Harlem, even hotter in this second-floor room where bodies are packed closely together, squirming, wet-shirted and as sticky as fudge. Someone pleads into a microphone: "Cool it, brothers and sisters, cool it." Everyone is straining for a glimpse of the Chief New Yorker, Mayor Edward Koch. He's there in the thicket of cameras, lights and stick mikes. The people, mostly black, want to hear what he has to say and to make their own feelings known. They think Mayor Koch has some explaining to do.

But it is no good. There are too many people, too much noise. A crowd clamours outside, feeling cheated and saying the affair is a sham.

This is a congressional inquiry and the mayor is here with senior policemen to defend the city's police against allegations that they have a down on blacks and Puerto Ricans and handle them roughly. But the second layer of the matter is that the mayor's own racial and class attitudes are under scrutiny - and, by extension, so is the way he runs this monstrous and marvellous imperial capital.

"The mayor is the biggest man in town, the guy who sets the tone", a black subway worker says. "And as far as we're concerned the tone around here is not good."

The hearing has to be postponed to another day, to be moved to a larger room. The mayor is booed as he climbs into his car and people bang their fists on the bonnet. The mayor is not a man to be intimidated: he can stand the heat in the kitchen. But his natural ebullience is muted and he looks pensive. This is no time for his famous catchphrase: "How'm I doing?"

He calls out those words all the time as he ranges New York, the best-known face in the city. It is also the title of a published collection of his aphorisms. "You're doing fine, Ed", the people usually shout back. Sometimes he answers the questions himself - "How'm I doing? Terrific!" - for Mr Koch fakes nothing, certainly not modesty. But in Harlem on this steamy day the answer to "How'm I doing?" would have to be: "Not so good, Ed."

The racial question has always been in the background of his six-year mayoralty. Many blacks and Hispanics think him unsympathetic to their difficulties: unemployment, poor housing, inadequate services, racism and diminished hope. Many white liberals agree with them. There is a perception that the Koch Raj favours the middle class and that it is, at least partly, responsible for developments changing New York, particularly the crowded golden core, the island of Manhattan, mainspring of finance, business, art and creative endeavour.

What is happening is that the young and well-off are steadily colonizing areas once cheap and lower middle-class. Even on the dismal Lower East Side, where trembling marionettes of junkies buy their drugs, there are the beginnings of change.

In the centre of this rumbling conflict stands Mayor Koch, popular with the majority, assertive, flamboyant and an unashamed champion of the middle class.

"Sure I am," he said to me in his office in City Hall. "I believe in middle-class values, the work ethic, the revulsion against crime. From my first day in office I have said there is nothing wrong with being middle class. The middle class pays the taxes and provides the jobs which provide the services for the poor. Stomp on the middle class and it will leave.

Carol Bellamy: sparring partner

Mayor Koch looking down from the steps of his power house

"But it's baloney to say I discriminate. Twenty-six per cent of the people here are below the poverty line and get 56 per cent of the budget. No city in the country gives so much. I am sensitive to the needs of all poor people, black or white. I was poor myself once."

Mr Koch's life has been a classic enactment of the American dream. He was born in the Bronx in 1924, the son of Polish Jewish immigrants, and knew hard times in the depression. He worked in a shoe shop to pay his way through law school, served in the army in Europe during the war and, retiring as a sergeant, started a legal career.

He entered liberal politics as a leading Greenwich Village reformer, was a civil rights worker in the deep South, opposed the Vietnam war, and was a Democrat Congressman for Manhattan for nine years. In 1977 he ran for the top job in American municipal politics and won with 48 per cent of the vote. By then his outlook had changed.

John Lindsay, one of his predecessors, made friends with rich whites and poor blacks, but had neglected the white middle class. It was to this latter group that Ed Koch made a direct appeal. He was pro-capital punishment, and called for a crackdown on crime, cuts in public spending, and an end to racial quotas. He attacked "poverticians", a word his critics construed as blacks. He is no economic wizard and was fortunate to arrive in City Hall when New York's financial crisis, the bleak November of liberal belief in free spending on services, was already being reined.

He had both Democrat and Republican support when he ran again in 1981, and won with 75 per cent, the highest popularity rating of any mayor. He is a bachelor with a full-time commitment to public service, an occupation he considers noble.

He is a kind of metaphor for New York, being what many New Yorkers think they are: street-smart, abrasive, quick with a gag, confrontationist. His New York cadences are peppered with phrases like "it's outrageous", "baloney" and "schmuck". He runs the show and loves doing so, the best-known mayor of New York since Fiorello LaGuardia.

He gave me this assessment of himself: "I am the best salesman this city has had for a long time. Even my enemies have to agree my personality has been helpful to the city. In 1975-77 people walked around with a hangdog look and we were on the edge of bankruptcy. We've restored to New York the spark it used to have. I'm partly a cheerleader. I'm good at communicating complicated issues in a simple way. People know I'm financially and intellectually honest." (His salary is £73,000 a year and he makes public all his finances).

Mr Koch is tenacious and determined and has a retentive memory for slights. He doesn't often forgive: he gets even. He says he does not get ulcers because he says what he thinks. His robustness and candour have rubbed fur the wrong way.

The mayor thinks the Harlem inquiry is meant, partly, as a political stick to beat him. Chicago and Philadelphia have recently elected black mayors and many blacks think New York should have one. Although the proportion of blacks and Hispanics in New York has increased, so that whites are now 52 per cent of the population, black political influence has declined. The population of Harlem, for example, rose by a third in the 1970s, but the mayor did not compensate by putting blacks into top jobs, and this can be seen as a political error.

Carol Bellamy, president of the City Council since 1977, thinks the mayor's language and attitudes have created racial tension. "Mayor Koch is a smart man who wants to make the city better, and he is in many ways reasonable and fair. But his words and attitudes have created an impression that New York does not care, and his administration is not sensitive to blacks and Hispanics."

For Miss Bellamy, sharing City Hall with Mayor Koch is never dull. She is 41 years old, and, like the mayor, springs from a working-class background, is a lawyer, single and a devoted, full-time public servant.

Real power lies in the executive office of mayor, not in the City Council. But to some extent the Council president is a loyal opposition, and Miss Bellamy sees her job as being part of the checks and balances of the administration. As for Mr Koch: "I'm his sparring partner. He's not always right and someone has to take him on. We've had our spats."

New York is not quite the city it was: a million people left it in the 1970s. For many of them the difficulties were too much to bear. Taxes are higher, but services are reduced. The place is dirtier, the city bureaucracy is fat. The subway works, but it is old and ramshackle and, as the mayor says, "it stinks".

Mayor Koch says: "Did you know that Mass is said in 23 languages in this city? It's the diversity that makes it electric, that gives it a special intelligence, makes you think faster, walk faster, talk faster."

It is this diversity, of course, that helps to make the mayor's toughest of jobs. Mr Koch says, in a politician's phrase, that he wants the poor to make it into the middle class (just as he did). But many of the poor are so far behind that they have difficulty getting on to the first rung.

The other day the mayor inaugurated a housing scheme for low-income people and got on well with the crowd of black people there. "Some people are trying to come between us", he told them. "Don't let them."

It was a serious Ed Koch speaking. He recognizes that his abrasiveness has upset people and can damage him politically. And he is contemplating the value of a more conciliatory approach, for a New York mayor has to be statesman as well as executive. More than any other issue, the inquiry into the police has made Ed Koch ponder on the task of running his astonishing metropolis.

Late sports special

Next Sunday, Wembley sees the oddest invasion of all the first game of American cricket ever staged outside the United States.

Hardly known at all in this country, American cricket is a fast-growing game in its home country, where it is also known as "the grenade game", from the extra points gained for knocking out a batsman. But Harvey Masbanger, who is promoting Sunday's big game between the Houston Tossers and the Seattle Mariners, reckons that it could catch on in a big way here, especially as we have no summer game geared to violence, like soccer or rugby.

"The average cricket fan would undoubtedly recognize the similarity between the British game and its American cousin. The wickets are there, the white uniform is there and the red ball is there. Several of them, actually. But he would also notice striking differences, the first being that both teams are on the field all the time."

"This is because when the bowler releases the ball, the fielders immediately charge forward with the intent of stopping the batsman hitting the ball. This can be done in a number of ways, such as by tripping him over, maiming him, or even killing him. This very rarely happens because the batsmen, also, on the field, block the intruding fielders with crumpling body tackles. It's very impressive, very structured sight - the patterns to an expert are almost beautiful."

Is American cricket, as they sometimes say, a sporting equivalent of chess?

Well, maybe. If anything, it tends to resemble that moment in a chess game when one player gets so furious that he sweeps all the pieces of the board - that's like "American" cricket. It's a very specialized game, of course; the batsmen who come on to field are not the same as those who bat, and even among batting batsmen there are those who specialize in hitting the ball, those who hit the bowler and those who pull up the wickets to attack the fielders if they get through.

Controversy still surrounds the 1,500-metre runner from Russia, Iif Simonov, who surprised everyone by coming last but one in his semi-final. He had been fully expected to come last. Simonov, a slim, peaty, slightly gawky figure, is not everyone's idea of the average Russian runner, not to put too fine a point upon it, many people suspect Simonov of being a woman. His previous results, which are uniformly disappointing, certainly bear this out. But as sex tests have always until now been applied to women, there is no way of finding out.

At the after-match press conference one daring American journalist asked Simonov if there was any truth in the rumours that he was not as other men, and perhaps more like other women. Simonov burst into tears and said he was interested only in building world peace, also in tennis, horse-riding and knitting, and that he wanted to open a boutique in Moscow after this was all over. As he was led away, dabbing at his mascara, another journalist managed to ask the Russian coach why on earth a woman would want to go in for men's events. To his surprise, the coach winked and said: "Why do you think?"

More shocks and surprises from the Americas Cup, the competition held to see whether America can change enough rules in their favour to keep the cup. The committee have ruled that Australia is not infringing the rules by having a series of champagne corks dangling by string from its keel, not indeed by throwing overboard a non-stop stream of empty lager cans during the race. The British complaint that the French boat had been fishing illegally in its waters was also over-ruled. A Canadian complaint was rejected because it was not bilingual.

Serious news, though, for the Latin American entry, Simon Bolivar. After a routine inspection for stowaways, the judges found a stash of cocaine worth over £3m hidden away in the bilges. This, of course, brings the weight of the boat over the permitted limit, and there may well be repercussions.

The shattering of a dream

At about 4 o'clock in the morning Fitz woke me. We washed quickly and sat for a few minutes drinking coffee, gearing ourselves up for the day ahead. I was feeling absolutely drained. For the past two years I had thought of little but this day and now it had arrived.

We returned to the shop at about six that morning. The first of the cooks were already at work and the security guards were padding through the deserted floors. There was nothing we could do except check the cleaning once again and hope that the sales girls would arrive on time. By 8 o'clock the exhausted managers had dragged themselves back in and the first trickle of other staff began. As opening hour approached Fitz and I did a last check of the floors. Everything was immaculate. Behind each counter and till stood a nervously expectant girl. We were ready to go. We went down to the ground floor where the security guards were waiting to open the door.

To our dismay we discovered that we had visitors. The directors of Dorothy Perkins, whom we had not seen for the past year while we were wrestling with the problems of the new store, were all there in their pinstripe suits. Not only that, but Mrs Roxburgh, the wife of one of them, came too, with straw hat and white gloves. She looked as if she was going to stand at the door greeting the customers.

When the doors opened, there was instant pandemonium. Almost immediately the tills were clattering and by the time we had retreated to the fifth floor, five minutes later, there was already a crowd around the snack bar.

Feeling slightly dazed, we headed for Fitz's office. We were both tired and wanted a few moments' peace. Seated at Fitz's desk was David Roxburgh, in high spirits, heroically explaining on the telephone to the Financial Times how he had performed to get the store open. Seated beside him in the only other chair was his wife. They looked at us as if we were intruders. Leaving them to it, we wandered back to the crowded sales floors.

Abridged from From A to Biba by Barbara Hulanicki, published by Hutchinson on September 5, price £8.95

Two years of planning and months of hard labour had turned the art deco department store that had been Derry and Toms into Big Biba. But even before the new venture opened, late in 1973, Barbara Hulanicki and her husband, Stephen Fitz-Simon, sensed the growing threat from the directors of British Land, the property company which now controlled the Biba enterprise. The subsequent struggle is described in the final extract from her forthcoming autobiography, From A to Biba.

"He just couldn't wait", said Fitz. But we were not to escape that easily from the self-appointed hero of the hour. About an hour later I was on the children's floor, worrying about the sweater stock that seemed to be going down awfully fast, when I was summoned back to Fitz's office, where the Roxburghs had made themselves thoroughly at home. A waiter had just been diverted from the fantastically busy restaurant to supply them with coffee, and two chairs had been placed in front of the desk for Fitz and me. There is something really degrading about having to sit in front of your own desk in your own office listening to someone sitting in your place.

I couldn't believe my ears. I was being pushed out

Roxburgh started to expand on his grand theory. Biba was to be "institutionalized". I had no idea what he was talking about, but as he went on I gathered that this meant that I was to have very little to do in the future. My job was to be somehow, miraculously, split up among a whole committee of nameless people. I couldn't believe my ears. I was being pushed out before anyone had any idea of even the first morning's sales.

A clerk put his head round the door and gave Fitz a piece of paper. I knew it would be the sales figure for up to 12.30. Fitz looked at the paper, showed it to me, and then handed it to Roxburgh, who had no way of knowing if the figure was good or bad. Fitz did nothing to enlighten him so in the end he had to ask. Before we open a new shop Fitz always writes down his sales but at one stage I thought that Fitz was going to break his neck.

In order to humour him, we said that we would go along with his suggestions. We agreed that there was not enough information to the public in the shop. We would have "Pay Here" signs and "Cash Desk" signs, but we wanted these done in a way that was right for the feel of the shop. To me it meant we could introduce neon all over the store, which had not been used since the 1950s, and I quite liked the idea. It was all agreed at the meeting, but Roxburgh and his merry men had no intention of allowing us any involvement. Next day a lorry arrived full of Tesco-like white light boxes to be put up all over the store. I felt sick. Very early in the morning before anyone arrived I went and jumped up and down on the whole lot. There wasn't one bit of usable white plastic left.

It was time for me to go. I couldn't watch the destruction of that beautiful building. They were dreadful to feel so powerless. They could have it. As my parting gesture I ordered 5,000 fluorescent plastic buckets for the use of the ground floor. Let them work that one out, I thought.

Against my better judgment I was inveigled into one last meeting with the entire Dorothy Perkins board. What were they trying to do? Why couldn't they let me go? Roxburgh flaunted my contract in my face. We had two more years to go and after that we couldn't open a shop within 50 miles of London.

All this time Fitz had been trying to raise finance to buy our business back. We couldn't have picked a worse time than the mid-1970s, with rising inflation. Most of the merchant banks had been pinched by the collapse of the property market, and London was full of ex-millionaires and people who knew Arabs.

We came so close to doing a deal with British Land that after several weeks of hard negotiation Fitz set off late one afternoon for the final meeting when the contracts would be signed. There were several solicitors and other experts in the room and at literally the last moment a technicality arose that made the deal impossible. When Fitz returned that night we knew that time was running out. Fitz carried on for a while but I bowed out after it was clear that we couldn't regain control, and left the store in the hands of British Land.

It really hurt
I still feel it today

Finally British Land decided that they and their acolytes could no longer run Big Biba. They decided to auction off the entire interior. Fitz and I were amazed at the interest of both private collectors and museums. Later the assistant curator of the Museum of Modern Art in New York told me how sad he had been that he had no money left at the time to buy anything for the museum. Oddly, it cheered us tremendously to think that so many of our things would find a good home where they would be appreciated.

Meanwhile, Fitz was trying to save the Biba name. It had become obvious that it was impossible for us to buy the building, but Fitz had found a man who controlled a small public company and who wanted to be our partner. We negotiated with British Land to buy the thriving cosmetics company and all the Biba trade marks. The price was agreed and our new partners were ready with their money.

We had new premises earmarked and we were waiting for the contracts to be prepared, but our

My own ambition in life is to buy back the bones of Biba and let the poor old girl rest in peace.

ALAN FRANKS' DIARY

The wages of son is Darth

First the bad news: my daughter, having attained the age of five, reckons she is now in line for pocket money, and opens the talks with a rock-solid bargaining posture. "Eighty quid a day." Now the worse news: one of her birthday presents was a typewriter, and even as I scribble, I can hear from below the plastic clacking of the Rillington Junior International. I understand she is writing a diary - "for The Times, you know" - so perhaps we had better treat the following as vaudeville entries. It has been fun, but youth must be given its head, I suppose.

Now the worse news: my son has got a leak - I wonder where from - about the pay bargaining situation and has slipped in an admittedly moderate party bid: "Eight pence and a cowboy sword."

A thought: if Richmond's Jean Rooklet brings her project to fruition, I could always fund her cash demand through the lineage fee. No, she'd never wear it.

No doubt believing that unity is strength, the two supplicants demand a tripartite meeting, to which I agree. In the sense that he is playing Gormley to her Scargill, there appears to have been an inversion of the age differential.

My daughter cites Morgan Prewitt, that most unstable of six-year-olds, as a precedent in the cash grant controversy. He, I am told, is in receipt of "millions of pounds a day" to keep him in Darth Vader masks and all the other accoutrements of today's fighting child. I am tempted to explain that he only gets his way by throwing a Morgasm, to which his mother, silly creature, always responds by showering him with pound notes as profuse as autumn leaves. I desist however, fearing a proliferation of such guerrilla tactics.

At last the good news: my daughter has discovered - I don't know where - a bottomless source of revenue. It is called The Junior Mint. You simply feed a blank paper between the cylinders and out comes a £50 note. It reminds me of those Ellison Novelty bargains of my own youth

(1/6d a throw), but I quash my scepticism. Suddenly I am a Keynesian, and quite happy to spend my way out of trouble.

My daughter threatens to "come up to The Times and watch the sandwiches go round." How very disingenuous. She is bent on cementing useful contacts, and I am blown if I am going to abet her.

Better news yet: she has completed her first column, which I here quote in full: "Dear girls please come to my party next year." It has a certain frankness, I agree, but if that's 800 words, then I'm Joanna Lumley.

Still better: the Rillington Junior International has broken. The tape, through which she has dubbed all manner of seditious prose, is shattered from the reel, and I cannot, in all honesty, fix the thing. She is "going up to The Times to complain."

Memo to Charles Douglas-Horne: "Watch out!"

The Junior Mint has arrived. I was expecting it to land with the portentous thud of new plant, but the thing has fluttered down on to the mat with the rest of the final demands. Before you can say treasury forecast my daughter is creating wealth at the breakfast table. The rival claimant wants a slice of the action, and a terrible fight ensues. There is milk and All-Bran all over the carpet. John Wayne would have approved.

Return from work to find the front room awash with pristine currency. Daughter husbanding same with the sinistrous glow of a self-made millionaire. Tremendous projects for spending in the public (ie, family) sector, starting with a major lido on the site of the old compost heap and a loft conversion to house "the next five babies."

Memo to wife: "Don't panic!"

A painful lesson on economics - but who is teaching whom, and who is learning what? My daughter has, quite simply, acquired the means of production and intends to capitalize on the produce. I am tempted to embark on a bit of theory and say that this is not what Mr Friedman means by money supply. But there looms the shape of M3, PSBR and the other impenetrables of that linguistic landscape, stranger by far than most toddlerite potos. The real clincher is the state of the notes. They are grey, smudged, and thin and not a third of the requisite size. In one corner is a thing that looks more like a thumbprint than a monarch's head. I think they would stand a fair chance in a bank of blind and handless tellers.

Cancer is a disease that strikes fear into the hearts of everyone

Annette Gartland met one woman who is fighting it... and winning

Lynne Pemberton was told last winter that she had cancer of the cervix - the neck of the womb. This January she underwent a radical Wertheim's hysterectomy where the uterus, cervix, ovaries, fallopian tubes and lymph nodes in the area are removed. She hopes that relating her experience, and feelings, might help other women struck by the disease.

The cancer sufferers you hear about are generally very optimistic and positive," she says. "At times I am, but I find it very difficult. I tend to be rather introspective and pessimistic, which colours my feelings about the future." Lynne's fear that she might have cancer began when a routine smear test last summer revealed an abnormality in cervical cells, and she was referred for further examination. This showed the need for a cone biopsy - a method of coring out cervical tissue for testing, which may totally remove the changing cells.

Lynne, who is 33 and lives in Kingston Surrey, was frightened about going into hospital and worried that she might not come safely through the operation. But she did think that the operation would be the end of the story, that nothing more serious would be found. But on her birthday, the hospital gynaecologist telephoned to explain as gently as possible that she had a "real cancer" and would lose her uterus.

I was completely numb. Before the phone went down I was in tears and sure I was going to die. The first thing I thought of was, I can't have children. The fact that was cancer probably hit me about 30 seconds later."

Her husband, Trevor, was also devastated. "We didn't talk about it in any reasonable way. We were too busy trying to comfort each other, just trying to let it sink in," Lynne said. "The gynaecologist explained that my situation was unusual. He said that cancerous cells were normally on the surface of the cervix, or took the line of least resistance towards the outside. In my case they appeared to have gone the other way, actually in towards a more muscular area. The cone biopsy hadn't gone deep enough. He didn't believe it until he looked through the microscope himself."

Concerned that she would need so much time off work, Lynne offered to leave her job with an architect's practice in Richmond, Surrey. The partners refused to accept her resignation and suggested that she should work when she could.

"It is silly, but you think 'I've always been healthy, not terribly fit but eating sensibly, not overdoing anything, not drinking too much, so why should it be me? Every few days I would suddenly think 'I'm dreaming, I'll wake up to find this isn't happening'."

Lynne had radiotherapy twice before the hysterectomy - an uncomfortable experience, but not frightening because it was so well explained. The worst part was when capsules of cesium which had been implanted under general anaesthetic and left in place for about 22 hours, were removed. She laughs, recalling the nurses extracting what seemed like miles of wadding. She also had a lymphogram, which checks on any spread of cancer to the lymph system.

The lymphogram was clear - her first good news in months.

Between radiotherapy sessions, Lynne pushed herself to take her final professional examination in architecture. "It was very traumatic time. Until the week before, I thought I would drop out." She and Trevor also decided to marry after living together for nine years, feeling that they could support each other better. Going into hospital for the hysterectomy, Lynne felt very frightened - about the pain and about dying.

She had expected to suffer quite severe, sharp pain afterwards. In fact, she experienced discomfort when moved and felt extremely bloated. She is glad to have declined her boss's offer to help pay for private treatment, which would have meant being in a room alone. The "tremendous" atmosphere in the Kingston Hospital ward helped. "I don't think I'd laughed so much in years. We all knew the most intimate details about each other and managed to laugh about almost everything that happened."

For about six weeks after the operation, movement was painful and slow, and Lynne was extremely tired. She mostly "marched up and down, drank water and slept". It must be hell, she says, for women with children to look after.

Lynne now receives hormone therapy, as the removal of ovaries ends the natural supply. She is distressed by the fact that she cannot have children. It is too early, she says, to consider adoption.

"Even though they've given me the maximum possible chance of nothing else happening, I'm not really convinced. I have to tell myself that I'm likely to be around in 20 years time."

Lynne felt that everyone who dealt with, or looked after her was "really wonderful". She felt well-informed. But she believes there could have been more explanation about the physical reaction to a hysterectomy and perhaps some printed information about the operation. There could also have been more advice about life in the ensuing months, like a simple reminder that you would need very large clothing until the swelling subsided.

The speed and upset of events meant that Lynne did not contact any people or organizations for support. If she had been given a list of names and addresses she might have done so.

She is now very aware of having put things off in the past. When she felt "invulnerable" in terms of health she had a view of the future, stretching ahead, which she did not have to define. She feels differently now. "A positive approach has to come from me. It's in a way part of the healing process. The more time elapses, the more optimistic I feel."

How screen tests can save lives

Cervical cancer kills more than 2,000 women in Britain each year. Older women are more at risk as the disease usually takes seven to ten years, or more, to develop. But over the past decade the number of women under 35 dying each year from cervical cancer has doubled to more than 170.

It is not the most common gynaecological cancer, however. Cancer of the ovaries kills twice as many women. And, by comparison, 12,000 women die in Britain each year from breast cancer. Cervical cancer counts for four per cent of all cancers in women. In 1978 there were more than 4,000 new cases in Britain.

Women who have intercourse when they are young, have many sexual partners or multiple venereal infections have a high risk of contracting cervical cancer. There is also evidence that there are high-risk males, according to Dr Dulcie Coleman, consultant cytopathologist at St Mary's Hospital in London. Partners of women with cervical cancer often had other partners who developed the disease.

More than two million cervical smear tests are performed in Britain each year, but screening has failed to reduce mortality. Dr Coleman cites the error rate in the test itself as one factor.

In areas such as Iceland and British Columbia in Canada where comprehensive screening takes place, the incidence of cervical cancer has been considerably reduced. In Finland, where the programme reaches 90 per cent of women between 30 and 59, cases of cervical cancer have halved. In Norway, where there is no national screening programme, incidence has increased by 15 per cent since 1965.

Alice Burns, health programmes organizer for the Women's National Cancer Control Campaign, said: "Any sexually active woman should have smear tests every three to five years."

Pre-malignant changes in the cervix are detected in about 1.5 per thousand women in Britain. A positive smear test, however, does not necessarily mean cancer, but that some cells are changing or have changed. The test is intended to pick up any abnormality. When pre-malignant cells are found early, treatment can be quick and effective.

There is evidence of a link between cervical cancer and herpes. And scientists have discovered an association between genital warts and the cancer. British research has shown the DNA of a genital wart virus present in 58 per cent of patients with pre-malignant lesions of the cervix. There are, however, arguments that the wart viruses are not directly involved but merely passengers in cancer cells.

The Women's National Cancer Control Campaign, 1 South Audley Street, London W1, 01-499 7532, can provide contacts, advice and support for women who discover they have cervical cancer.

TALKBACK

Judging the shoplifters

From Mr Philip Joseph, Books Etc, Charing Cross Road, London, WC2. Quite correctly, Mrs Williams (Friday Page, July 22) asks for a more humane approach to suspected shoplifters but then goes on to request supermarkets to adopt greater willingness to assess a person's background before deciding to prosecute.

We run a small chain of bookshops and employ staff to try to deter shoplifting and security staff to catch shoplifters. We put notices stating All Thieves Will Be Prosecuted. This we do regardless of age, sex or background.

We do not know how to tackle the question of a person's background. What are the factors we should take into account? The vast majority of people we arrest admit their guilt and inform us they have never done anything like it before.

We are not qualified to judge a person's background. It is our duty to present the facts and it is the responsibility of the courts to decide on such matters.

From Nicholas Moss, Marine Avenue, North Ferriby, Humberside. In her article on shoplifting Veronica Grocock included part of a Home Office report Theft in Shops.

Among recommendations in the report, as a means to protect the sick and elderly from the experience of prosecution for shoplifting, is an alternative to the criminal charge of theft: "Taking goods without authority and without making payment".

While the report's motives are entirely laudable, the implication of this is to create what amounts to two-tier dishonesty, pure unadulterated dishonesty dealt with by the Theft Act and a second grade dishonesty to be explained away thus: "That doesn't really count... it was only taken from a shop." While not condoning dishonesty, shops must bear some of the responsibility for displaying goods in such a way that their removal, whether theft or by accident, continues to grow.

Kill or cure?

From John R Skyles, Denning Road, Hampton. Joanne Bower (Wednesday Page, August 3) asks the question: where does one draw the line between animal experiments which are beneficial and those which are not?

Should we be concerned for human welfare we must ask the question of any new proposed control on vivisection: What would have been the consequences on present day medicine if such control had been made effective 50 years ago?

I am scared of moralists. Especially those whose beliefs if they had been the norms of the past would have left us defenceless against the horrors which filled Victorian and Edwardian hospitals.

Smokescreen

From Rosemary Stephens, Albert Road, Clevedon, Avon. The letter from Helen Signy (Friday Page, July 29) reminds me of an occasion some years ago in West Africa, when I was invited to visit an exhibition on dietetics.

Illustrations for the different stands had been culled from various sources and included one of then current advertisements for, I think, Abdullah cigarettes showing a group of slyph like men and women in evening dress. The caption read: "You see these people? They are lean and ugly through not taking enough carbohydrate."

THE TIMES COOK

Shona Crawford Poole

prawns, Parma ham, sliced avocado, radishes and cucumber with sprigs of mint or basil. Then add a scoop of one or more of the savoury sorbets.

I shall be making the ices again in Harrods at lunchtime on Friday using a new ice cream freezing and churning machine from I.C.T.C. called the Gelato Chef which makes easy work of ice creams and sorbets. However none of the recipes is any worse for being made the usual way.

Bloody Mary sorbet
Serves four to six
12 ripe medium-sized tomatoes
juice of 1 lemon
2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon sugar
Salt to taste
4 tablespoons vodka

Drop the tomatoes into boiling water for a few moments then slip off the skins. Discard the seeds and purée the flesh by pressing it through a sieve or processing it briefly. Combine the tomato pulp with all the remaining ingredients and freeze it, covered, until the mixture has the texture of stiff slush.

Turn the partially frozen sorbet into a bowl and beat it vigorously. Return it to the freezer to freeze firm.

Most ices need to be softened, or ripened before serving. This is best done in the refrigerator and may take from 15 to 20 minutes to an hour.

Cucumber ice
Serves four to six
1 large cucumber
6 spring onions
Juice of 1 lemon
150ml (1/2 pint) natural yogurt
1cm (1/2 inch) cube peeled fresh ginger
Salt
1 egg white

Peel the cucumber and discard the seeds. Purée the flesh in a processor or blender with the green part of the spring onions. Add the lemon juice and yogurt. Use a garlic press to squeeze the juice from the fresh ginger and add it to the mixture, then season it to taste with salt. Freeze the pulp until it has the texture of stiff slush then turn it into a bowl. Whisk the egg white to a firm meringue. Beat the cucumber mixture thoroughly then fold in the egg white. Return the ice to the freezer and freeze until firm.

Avocado ice cream
Serves six to eight
3 large, ripe avocados
300 ml (1/2 pint) double cream
6 tablespoons good mayonnaise
Juice of 1 lemon
1/2 clove garlic
Salt
1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper
2 egg whites

Purée the avocado flesh by pressing it through a sieve, or use a processor. Combine the avocado with the cream, mayonnaise, and lemon juice. Squeeze the garlic in a press and add the pulp together with salt to taste and the cayenne. Mix well and freeze until the mixture is a stiff slush. Turn it into a bowl and beat it thoroughly. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites and return the mixture to the freezer.

When using a churn the egg whites are beaten lightly and added to the vegetable or avocado purée at the beginning of the freezing process.

Avocado ice cream looks pretty served in tall wine glasses with a couple of un-peeled prawns hooked over the rim of each glass.

Melon and wine sorbet
Serves four to six
1 very ripe charantais melon
110g (4oz) sugar
300ml (1/2 pint) dry white wine

Purée the melon flesh by pressing it through a sieve or in a processor. Stir in the sugar. Stir the mixture from time to time until the sugar dissolves and add the wine. Freeze until the mixture has the texture of stiff slush then beat it vigorously and freeze until firm.

GOING PRIVATE

A few years ago Mr Benn promised this country a "massive and irreversible shift" in the location of economic power. Today there is, indeed, the prospect of an important change in the pattern of ownership and control. It could well be massive and may prove irreversible. But it will be very different in character from that intended by Mr Benn. Instead of more nationalization and socialization, many industries now in state hands are to pass into private ownership.

At present comment is focused on the proposed sale of 51 per cent of British Telecom. In this instance there is one dominant supplier and no declared intention of changing the position. Critics have asked, with reason and force, what purpose is served by converting a publicly owned monopoly into a privately owned one. There is a danger that, by failing to think through the purpose of privatization, the Government may become entangled in a protracted debate about British Telecom and so lose momentum in other areas.

Two kinds of privatization need to be distinguished. The first is the sale of state assets in an industry where there already are - or, at least, potentially could be - several competitors. The second is in the contrasting circumstances where, for technological reasons, there can be only one supplier. There is a powerful case for privatizing natural monopolies - such as British Telecom - which come into this second category, but it is less obvious than the case for privatizing competitive industries. The economic aspects, in particular, are most clear and persuasive when competition prevails.

If there are many suppliers of a good or a service, rivalry between them ensures that output will expand until a point is reached at which price matches the extra cost of production. As a further increase in output beyond this point would lead to lower prices and higher costs, the suppliers would suffer losses. So the further increase in output does not take place and instead resources are allocated to another industry where, once again, competition will establish the right balance between prices and costs. It follows that public ownership is unnecessary. Market forces and private enterprise generate a socially optimal outcome if they are left to themselves. This outcome, known technically as marginal cost pricing, has been blessed by generations of textbook writers and is about as uncontroversial as any large principle in economics can be.

The real world is more complicated than textbooks and practice has a habit of overwhelming theory. But there should be no doubt that the basic ideas in the standard description of the competitive process are right. Nit-pickers may want to add refinements, qualifications and provisos. But they cannot deny that most of private industry is profitable, that much of the nationalized sector is unprofitable and that losses are incurred by nationalized industries because, in certain operations, costs are conspicuously above prices. If these industries were in the private sector, the marginal operations would be closed down and the resources they employ would become available for more worthwhile activities.

As it happens, the greatest potential gains from privatization do not come in new and growing industries, such as British Telecom, but in old industries where loss-makers have been tolerated because their deficits are covered by profits elsewhere in the business or by subsidies from the Exchequer. Perhaps the most glaring example of this kind of inefficiency is the National Coal Board. The recent Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report showed how unprofitable mines are kept in production and their losses met by surpluses earned in efficient mines. Coal-mining is certainly not a natural monopoly. For most of its existence the British coal-mining industry has been in the hands of several independent companies and, even today, this remains the normal state of affairs in other countries. On economic criteria the case for privatizing coal and splitting the industry into several units is far less controversial than the case for privatizing British Telecom.

The strength of competitive forces depends not only on the number of suppliers in this country, but also on an industry's openness to imports from abroad. On this basis British Steel, British Shipbuilders, Rolls-Royce and British Airways are definite candidates for privatization. In all five cases the main obstacle is an unsatisfactory commercial record in recent years, a consideration which is thought to preclude the introduction of private capital. It deserves to be emphasized that what matters in privatization is the ultimate benefit to the community. In these cases the benefit consists largely in the elimination of loss-making activities. If unsuccessful businesses were transferred to private hands at nominal prices and their new managers restored them to health, the ultimate result would be much better for society than if they were to stay in government ownership and lose money indefinitely. The unprofitability of a nationalized industry does not alone justify the deferment of privatization.

The case for privatizing competitive industries is, therefore, the same as the case for competition. When a competitive industry is artificially contained in one enterprise and that enterprise is publicly owned, managers lack the discipline imposed by shareholders. As they believe that the state will, in the final analysis, cover their losses, there is a temptation to enjoy a quiet life by maintaining too many unprofitable operations. The perpetuation of unprofitable operations is evidence of resource misallocation and economic inefficiency. When nationalized industry managers take a more robust attitude and try to close down loss-makers, they are frequently hampered or prevented by politicians, responding to special lobbies and pressure groups, and an often exaggerated idea of the social benefit conferred by maintaining loss-making industries, which does not occur in the private sector.

So both economic and political arguments favour a programme of thoroughgoing privatization in competitive parts of the economy. The rationale for privatizing natural monopolies has a much larger political content and perhaps understandably causes more disagreement. It will be examined in a later article on this page.

RETHINK ON THE RHINE

The defence review now in progress has considered British strategy outside the Nato area, but has yet to contemplate the political and military tangle on Nato's central front. It would be tempting to the cost-accountants in the defence world to assume that the Falklands crisis was a national aberration; but most strategists know that it is always the unpredictable event which occurs first. Moreover the very strength of Nato's central front, upon which the security of the United Kingdom ultimately depends, has induced Soviet outflanking manoeuvres and proxy operations in many other trouble spots throughout the world. It would be an unwise general who failed to guard his flanks and rear, and that precaution should be the basis of Britain's evolving strategy, particularly since it should coincide with a financial need to question the undue fixation with Nato's central front which has turned Britain's Rhine Army into a strategic unouchable.

Britain's overall contribution to Nato far exceeds that of her allies, both financially and in terms of the range of military capability. Any sensible basis of cost sharing, and operational burden sharing, would see that the British contribution should be concentrated in the maritime area, while the continental forces would come mainly from West Germany and its neighbours. Instead we have the West German Navy, which should anyway concentrate its skills on the Baltic, wasting resources acquiring an Atlantic capability, which is already met by the British and, to some extent, by the Dutch.

There is no operational logic in the strategy of forward defence in West Germany, which is persisted with for political reasons which now need revaluation. The consequence of this is Britain has no flexibility about the deployment of her army-in-being, which is predominantly bogged down guarding every forward inch of a sixty-three kilometre front. That front would be more appropriately defended by West German forces who defend the rest of the line. The British Corps could then be positioned as a tactical reserve for the whole of Northern Army Group.

There would be two advantages in such a change. The first would be that it would dissolve the tactical rigidities imposed on Nato's military thinking by the forward defence strategy. The second is that Britain could then make perfectly legitimate savings in the cost of her standing contribution to land forces in Central Europe without affecting the day-to-day order of battle which has become such a political obsession within the Alliance.

A smaller Rhine army, held as a tactical reserve, would obviously call into question the British command of Northern Army Group. That is a dispensable appointment, not least because there would then be no one-over-one relationship between HQ BAOR and HQ First British Corps. There should be further savings in headquarters costs which, at the rate of £10 million per 1,000 men, is always to be desired.

The political and military consequence of Britain's ceding the command of Northern Army Group would be to expand the authority and influence of the Bundeswehr in Nato's councils. That is only right, in view of West Germany's preponderant contribution and critical geographical position. It would be represented by Belgium and The Netherlands. It could lead to the withdrawal of their units from West Germany, but, though that would be a pity it could not be held to make any serious difference to the likely order of battle in an emergency.

It is true that the Federal Republic has always been coy about assuming too preponderant a role within Nato. Even now its leaders complain that demographic difficulties may restrict West Germany's ability to maintain its army at today's strength. Nevertheless it is only if West Germany is prepared to alter its military strength that any more than marginal difference can be made to the military equation across the Iron Curtain. If the West Germans want the forward strategy to be maintained, in spite of its illogicality, perhaps they should be prepared to put their men where their mouths are.

It is time that West Germany and her allies recognized the reality of German power and adjusted to it. She is no longer a genuine junior partner in the Alliance. Indeed it has become an unnecessary paradox that the most powerful country in Europe should participate in an Alliance in a way which confers superiority on her less capable and poorer allies. The penalties imposed on those allies by the formulae devised in 1954 should now be changed so that there is a more efficient distribution of forces within Nato. Only then will the Alliance be organized to maximize its defences. That is the fundamental truth of the matter which the British Government should pursue through all the diplomatic thickets which have concealed it for nearly thirty years.

Intimations of mortality

From Instructor Captain M. A. Waller, RN (Retd)

Sir, It was Egypt. He was trying to sell me a rug. I was resting. He outlined its virtues at length ending, "Sir, it will last you a lifetime." He stopped short, looking at my white hair, turned and walked away laughing loudly.

Dammit! I'm only 67.

Yours appreciatively,

From the Chairman of The Conservation Society

Sir, The extinction of the natural flora and fauna of this country in order to build motorways and other developments diminishes the environment permanently; the developments exact a real, if unquantifiable, "opportunity cost" of indefinite duration in order to provide what may well prove to be a very short-lived present benefit.

Perhaps, therefore, the public sentiment noted by Michael Baily (report, July 29) which "supports those who champion the butterfly reserve rather than advocates of roads" has a sounder basis than the general tone of his article suggests.

The real objections to motorway building, however, are far more substantial and have been put many times by this society and other environmental groups without, unfortunately, making much impact on policy.

They are: firstly, that building more roads tends to encourage the growth of even more traffic, rather than the other way round; secondly, that increasing our national dependence on oil, which is the inescapable effect of increasing road traffic, is likely to prove unfortunate, if not downright dangerous, in a relatively few years when diminishing oil supplies impose severe price increases if not physical shortages; thirdly, that encouraging private road traffic depresses the provision of public transport, both by road and rail, to the deprivation of the 50 per cent of the population which, for various reasons does not possess its own cars and finally, that increasing road freight traffic causes intolerable congestion, pollution and environmental degradation in urban areas, which motorways do nothing to alleviate and much to exacerbate.

Comparisons with other countries are misleading. They mostly have greater distances between towns, smaller population densities, and a smaller network of secondary roads. Hence this country must formulate its own transport policy to suit its own present and expected future circumstances.

It makes sense to try to shift as much traffic as possible from road to rail to relieve road congestion, make better use of presently under-used assets, and above all, to preserve a greater range of options for the future.

It makes no sense at all to continue sacrificing scarce land and irreplaceable amenity in a vain attempt to build sufficient roads to avoid congestion. The ability to motor unimpeded is not one of the fundamental democratic freedoms. If congestion occurs, motorists can and do learn to live with it.

In all probability shortages of oil and other commodities will solve the congestion problem within the foreseeable future. Why cannot we look ahead, for a change, and learn to adopt a sustainable life-style which is not prone first to hardening of the arteries and later to pernicious anaemia?

R. D. HARRISON, Chairman,

Qualified for the job

From Mr Keith Nickol

Sir, I express no view as to whether the alleged "infiltrators" at Cowley put wrong, dismissed the extent of their qualifications for political reasons or not.

It is, though, in my certain knowledge that if a degree holder applies for a job he or she is often rejected as being over-qualified. If they do manage to get a job and their fellow workers find out they have a degree they are often not accepted, however good they are at their jobs.

Degree holders have as much right to a job as anyone else. It is quite wrong to assume them to be politically motivated if they apply for humble jobs. When I applied for a job as a hospital storeman I was asked searching political questions. It never seemed to occur to the interviewer that I was simply jobless seeking a job.

Yours sincerely,
KEITH NICKOL,

Nigerian students

From Mr N. G. Joseph

Sir, Those who have experience in dealing with Nigerian students will find the reported statement of the officials of the Nigerian High Commission unconvincing (The Times, August 2). The most common reason given for non-payment of fees by the students is the restrictions, as well as the long bureaucratic delay, in releasing the necessary foreign exchange. Yet the High Commission officials deny this.

The concern of the educational institutions and hostels about the £3m owing by the Nigerian students is understandable. What is less well known, and should cause us equal concern, is the undeserved privations and problems these young people suffer, with perhaps consequent ill effects on the quality of their work and health.

While any approach made to the Nigerian High Commission for any assistance receives a polite response, I found their scope for speedy action is limited. Lack of information is not the real cause of this, as the High Commission officials claim, but a lack of a definite policy.

One suggestion worth considering is to get a financial guarantee, supported by the Nigerian Government (even in the case of private students) before admission is given to students for any course of study.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Churches' role in world politics

From the Acting General Secretary of The British Council of Churches

Sir, Thank you for your critical, yet sympathetic leader (August 10) on the World Council of Churches. The Church at every level needs loyal friends who are also unsparring critics.

There is, however, a contradiction at the heart of your critique. You rightly warn the WCC of the besetting sin of becoming an end in itself. Yet that is where your recipe would lead. You ask the WCC to devote itself more single-mindedly to the task of restoring Christian unity.

True, Christian disunity is the Church's Achilles heel. It is a scandal because a disunited Church cannot effectively serve a spiritually and physically broken world. To this world Jesus, quoting Isaiah, says "I have come to bring good news to the poor, release to captives, to let the broken victims go free."

That is why the WCC is right to make the world its priority, to have spoken on Afghanistan (and probably wrong not to have spoken more strongly), right to combat racism, right to plead for economic justice, right to condemn an arms race that kills hungry children and threatens to destroy God's creation.

The danger is not, as you suggest, that the WCC is out of touch with "the ordinary Christian." It usually speaks only too eloquently for the world's ordinary Christians, most of whom are neither well-fed, white nor western.

That is why the average British churchgoer is so disappointed. We cannot easily get used to being one of the world's minorities. I can attest to that personally. At home my views are held to be left wing. Abroad, more often than not, I find myself somewhere to the right of centre. The WCC's problem is that it is very close to the global centre yet its task is to reflect Jesus, its Lord, and not necessarily its membership.

The Church has no real choice. The world's agenda must always be its own agenda. But on God's terms. Woe to a Church that avoids the social, economic and political issues of its time. Each of them is also a spiritual issue. Only by facing political conflict can politics be transcended and healing be brought to the world.

Future of Alliance

From Sir Harold Beeley

Sir, I fully agree with Edward Mortimer's rejection (August 9) of the view that the Liberal-SDP Alliance should attempt "to destroy and replace Labour." But his conclusion that the Alliance should be offering Labour the prospect of a centre-left coalition seems to me quite unrealistic.

As the Labour Party moves further to the left it surely becomes increasingly inconceivable that, with the short-term objective of preventing the prolongation of Conservative government, it would collaborate in a reform of the electoral system, the result of which would probably be to preclude for ever the fulfilment of the Party's more revolutionary dreams.

Fire at sea

From Mr A. Crosby

Sir, I wish to inform The Times that their account (August 11) of the rescue of the crew of the German vessel Delfstedt omitted to mention that the first vessel on the scene, the first to attach lines to the German vessel, alert the rescue services and contain the fire with its own fire-fighting equipment, was the Survey vessel Whitethorn.

She stood by tied to the German vessel to ensure the safety of the German crew, putting herself at risk, not knowing the nature of the cargo or severity of the fire because the German vessel had lost all means of radio communication. The Master and engineers from the German ship came aboard the Whitethorn to use the ship's radio.

I believe a good deal of credit should be given to the Master and crew of the Whitethorn for their competent and professional handling of the situation.

I might add that the RN Minesweeper Crichton appeared not to have adequate experience and equipment for this emergency in one of the busiest shipping lanes of the world. The Whitethorn had to supply additional fire-fighting equipment to the Navy vessel.

Yours etc,
A. CROSBY,

Body and mind

From Professor P. Armitage

Sir, Even those who, like myself, are sceptical of some of the claims made for alternative medicine will welcome the support given by Ruth West and Brian Inglis, in the third of their articles (August 10), for controlled studies to compare conventional and alternative therapies.

Many of us find it difficult to enthuse about systems of treatment with a weak theoretical basis and little convincing evidence of effectiveness. The latter requires more than mere anecdotes of individual patients' experiences.

Fortunately, the principles of comparative clinical trials are widely understood, although their extension to the comparison of conventional and alternative therapies will require a more generous degree of cooperation from the practitioners on both sides than has usually been evident.

This pragmatic approach to the evaluation of therapy is unfortunately discouraged in your rather broader for our neighbour and love for our enemy are rightly, biblically at the heart of the WCC's agenda. To separate religion from life is a heresy. God in Christ has everything to offer a starving child and the commander of a Polar submarine, here and hereafter. That is why Christian unity and the ecumenical movement, which the WCC serves, matters so much.

One of the central affirmations of the Assembly that has just ended is that the unity of the Church and the unity of the whole human family remain central and equal priorities for the WCC.

Yours sincerely,
PAUL OESTREICHER,
Acting General Secretary,
The British Council of Churches,

From the Venerable F. H. House

Sir, As one who has had inside knowledge of the workings of the World Council of Churches for many years, I welcome the fact that you have devoted two leading articles to its activities (August 5 and 10). But I would venture two observations.

First, as a Council of Churches, not an independent agency, it must in principle have due regard for the wishes of the leaders of the member-churches in each country. If they oppose overt action by the council's officers or committees with regard to conditions in their country, official action by the council is thereby restricted.

Secondly, the predictable preference of news-men for reporting statements on political issues should not be allowed to obscure the fact that the remarkable Lima statement of agreement on the doctrines of baptism, eucharist and ministry, to which you refer, is not the product of a new-found "maturity" in the Council, but was the product of over 30 years' continuous work on "faith and order" questions, which from the first have continued to have a major place in World Council operations.

Yours faithfully,
FRANCIS H. HOUSE,

August 10.

The programme of the far left is realistic only on the not unreasonable assumption that sooner or later our present absurd electoral system will produce a left-wing majority in the House of Commons based on a third or little more of the electorate. This prospect no doubt helps to explain the considerable support which exists within the Conservative Party for the principle of proportional representation.

It is in this direction, and not towards Labour, that the Alliance will probably have a look if it gives the priority it ought in the national interest to give to the cause of electoral reform.

Yours faithfully,
HAROLD BEELEY,
Reform Club,
Pall Mall, SW1.

Press in South Africa

From Mr Alan Locke

Sir, I purchased your newspaper August 1 ($1.50), to peruse the current events in South Africa and to put aside as a memento of my young son's birthday.

I see Donald Woods is still at it! He states, apparently with a straight "face", that the South African press is not free. We all agree, but self-protection against subversion, while on the extreme side, is a natural tendency and the South Africans are correct in their desire to preserve some semblance of order in the middle of chaos.

The press is not free in the United Kingdom, either - as Mr Woods could well inquire of your own paper or, indeed, the Financial Times.

I have often wondered why the gentleman in question did not have the courage of his own convictions and become a journalist in, say, Uganda or Burundi - not run to the arms of white so-called democracy in England, and snipe.

He could do with a dose of black "rule", as I have experienced, or, better, five years on black-groves in Angola or Mozambique. He would then run to South Africa as so many blacks do - not run away.

Most sincerely,

obscurest leading article of the same day. You denigrate the "purely scientific attitude to medicine", the "casual approach" as a basis for scientific exploration, and the statistical approach to medicine.

If, by a non-casual approach, you mean a recognition of the extent to which a patient's response is influenced by an enormous number of external factors and personal characteristics, then you should realise that it is precisely this "indeterminism" that makes it imperative to compare therapies by carefully designed studies in which statistical design and analysis are essential ingredients.

How otherwise are we ever to know that the apparent success of an alternative therapy is due to the intrinsic properties of the therapy and not to the individual characteristics of those patients who happen to choose it?

The treasure hunt for antiquities

From the Chairman of the Antiquities Dealers Association

Sir, Mr Tatton-Brown (August 1) is absolutely correct in saying that many antiquities seem these days to command over-inflated prices, e.g. the recently sold Celtic horse harness mount from Buckinghamshire at £34,000, plus buyer's premium. However, before attacking the auction houses and "peddlars" of and dealers in antiquities" he should first identify where his friends are.

Many antiquities in this country, to which he is largely referring, are actually found by chance, as against being "looted" (his words), or have pedigrees of residence in collections here. The Antiquities Dealers Association (ADA) was set up just over a year ago in an endeavour to combat many of the ills in the "trade". Many of its members bid for or supply material to numerous museums and work in close cooperation with them, often assisting in background research as to provenances, etc.

Mr Tatton-Brown's "two-pronged attack", the first against treasure-hunters and the second against dealers, is a little lopsided. ADA very much supports the first "prong", hence its endeavours to introduce, among other things, a system of registration of pieces, but on the second "prong" he attacks himself and the work of his colleagues.

ADA has been accepted as an affiliated institutional member of the Museums Association; the Council for British Archaeology, especially its director, Dr Henry Cleere, has been most helpful and interested in the formation of ADA and important discussions will shortly be in train between both bodies. Not least, the previous Minister for the Arts, the Right Hon Paul Channon, has similarly expressed his interest "in this development in the antiquities world" - the formation of ADA.

The members of ADA agree with and subscribe to, via their code of conduct, much that Mr Tatton-Brown propounds, except that they are loath to find themselves upon his second "prong", uncomfortable as it will be, it will also mean that many museums will lose good friends, information and, not least, acquisitions that they might well otherwise not be aware of.

PETER A. CLAYTON, Chairman,

From Mr George Gibson

Sir, Defending modern farming practices, Mr Watson and Mr de Salis (August 6) commit at least two errors. Mr Watson doesn't appreciate that British farmers still supply only half the grists for British bread. The Government has recently sunk £14m "pump-priming" in a "Food from Britain" campaign that couldn't produce a loaf of bread in its lavish display of provender at last month's Royal Show.

Mr de Salis overlooks the dire trend in the EEC, led by Britain in this instance, for modern, highly capitalized methods to throw workers out of jobs, thus impoverishing rural life. In 1958 20 million of the workforce in the present EEC Ten worked on the land. Now this number has dwindled to 8,700,000, or 8.2 per cent of the total force; in Britain the proportion has wasted to about 2 per cent.

GEORGE GIBSON,

Sloanes at Exeter

From Mr Owen Hughes

Sir, What a pity that Professor Ted Whag (report, August 8) allows his anti-public school prejudices to get in the way of the truth when he relates an incident at his own university.

The Exeter University Federation of Conservative Students did indeed hire a white Rolls-Royce as a counter-protest during a day of action, in an attempt to show that at least Conservative students need no more in grants from the Government.

However, the "leading lights" of the Exeter FCS are not the public-school "coves" that Professor Whag speaks of. No, like any loyal Tory Party organization, they have responded to Mrs Thatcher's initiative and have ruthlessly purged all the wet public-school types who, in despair, have set up exclusive dining clubs and Tory reform groups from where they snipe at the Tebbittite FCS.

Planning by default

From Mr Michael Cross

Sir, The demise of economic and physical policy thinking and planning is to be viewed with great alarm. Your leading article, "A plan by any other name" (August 8) highlights the madness of planning by default.

Buried within this no policy/no planning philosophy lie elements of the belief that state involvement of almost any kind hinders and possibly prevents economic initiative taking. Is this really the case?

Surely the state plays a vital role by providing the physical, social and technical infrastructure upon which the economy can develop. For example, without a coherent and long term policy as regards the communication/information infrastructure required for the UK, the future growth of the economy might be severely impeded.

Would it be too much to ask the renamed Social Science Research Council to fill the vacuum created by the closure of the "think tank" (NEDO beware) and to present a coherent series of policy options from its "centres of excellence"? If not, where can we turn for real policy analysis?

Yours sincerely,
MICHAEL CROSS,

THE ARTS

Nobody has done more than Channel 4 to raise the status of the television film, an achievement recognized by the establishment of a special section for such work at the Locarno Film Festival. But Channel 4 reacted strangely to Locarno's offer to fly the flag, as John Bowen reports

Picture palace for the home

The new element at the Locarno Film Festival this year was the inclusion of a special section devoted to television films. Of course there are plenty of television festivals (Monte Carlo, Venice, Banff) with categories for almost every sort of television, but Locarno is the first to recognize that a new art form has arrived, the television film, and that its proper place for display may be at a film festival.

It has been true for some time that any cinema film which is not a blockbuster may have to rely on an eventual sale to television to bring it into profit. In the USA, with the advent of cable, there are feature films being made which are intended only for television. In Britain we have Channel 4, which has been putting up substantial proportions of a film's budget in order to have the right to show it first on television. The BBC has the facilities to follow suit, but a reluctance so far to do so.

The interdependence of television and cinema has become close, and can only grow closer. One must salute Locarno for recognizing the sale. Yet, just within the world of cinema itself, though films may take much money and time to set up, many of the decisions which concern them will be entirely frivolous. The admirable decision by the executive committee at Locarno came about simply because an exhibition of drawings by Elinor had fallen through: the television film section was set up as a replacement, with four months to organize and the comparatively small budget of 50,000 Swiss francs.

The television movies had to be obtained quickly, and what is quickest is not always best. Entries for Monte Carlo and Venice are chosen corporately after much discussion. Locarno had to go to production companies and ask for entries before a deadline. There were 92 entries from 21 countries, but even so those from Argentina and Egypt arrived after the deadline, and the Australian entry is thought to be still on the way.

The worst disappointment was the reaction of Channel 4, whose Films on 4 have carried the company flag for drama (with not much, to be sure, behind it) and topped its ratings. Gian-Carlo Bertelli, chief executive of the television film section, asked specifically for Walter, and was denied. He asked thereafter for any of the Films on 4, and was denied them all.

These films, he was told, were for distribution in cinemas; they must not be called "television movies" at all. It is hard to believe that any of the Goldcrest First Love series, excellent as most of them have been, were intended for cinema distribution.

The BBC submitted one entry, To the Lighthouse. Unfortunately the BBC's co-producer on The Captain's Doll, Primitivo, independently considered this D. H. Lawrence-based film. Both were shown as BBC entries in the programme. It appeared, therefore, as if the BBC had put in two films, both adaptations from literary sources, both set at the beginning of this century, both very painterly pieces of image-making, both moving at a leisurely pace. The duplication suggested that the BBC was making a statement about the nature and aims of its television drama, which is simply not true.

The 92 films could not all be shown in competition; no jury would tolerate so many. An ad hoc panel whittled them down to 18 in competition, 53 shown "for information". With such an unselective entry-process, there was inevitably much dross, even in competition where Janhoe was shown to a surmounting of stifled giggles from jury and journalists.

As for the international jury, it also had to be found quickly. There were two directors (Franco Rossi of Italy and Roger Gillioz of Switzerland), one writer (David Hare from Britain) and Alvin Marill from the USA, who was none of those, but the author of a definitive compilation of American television films, an encyclopaedist more than a critic. The difference between the attitudes of the jurors to their common subject may best be illustrated by quotation.

David Hare: "The place where we have to make films now is for television. ... In Britain, films made for television are more interesting and important than those made for a collapsing film industry. ... I hate the depressing grammar of some television movies ... the English tendency to love the word more than the image." Alvin Marill: "A television movie is something which must be made quickly on a budget of between one and two million dollars. It must be designed to be split into 17-minute segments, geared to presenting its stars, not what the writer wishes to say, and will be considered by the networks as a potential pilot."

All four of the jurors spoke English; two spoke no other language. Many of the entries bore no subtitles. The prizes went to two English-language films and one German. Harry's Game, Yorkshire Television's well-made thriller set in Northern Ireland, was awarded the Gold. Domino, a very stylish symbolic piece in black and white, from Germany, about an actress and the unemployed, had the Silver, and a Public Service Broadcasting film from the USA, also in black and white, Miss Lonelyhearts, had the Bronze.

This last, made on a budget of only 140,000 dollars by two young Americans, Michael Dinner (director) and Jay Holman (producer), was much admired, and many of us, including one member of the jury, would have preferred to see it in first place.

There were other awards - to John Mortimer for his screenplay of A Voyage Round My Father and Rosemary Harris for her performance in To the Lighthouse. Domino picked up awards for its actress and cameraman; a Swedish entry had a Special Mention and so, shamefully, did a routine American western.

Next year there will be a greatly refined method of selection, with restricted entry, though the practice of showing a selection out of competition as a supplement to the jury-entries will continue, and there will be the facilities of a market where independent producers will be able to show video-cassettes in private to possible buyers.

"Television movies" is not a derogatory description. It is likely that millions more people will see on television those films just shown in the Grand Piazza - Vivement Dimanche, Truffaut's slipshod homage to Hitchcock, the almost sinfully enjoyable Spanish version of Carmen, the sado-sentimental Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence, in which David Bowie gives his Peter O'Toole in a Japanese prison camp. Channel 4, alone in Britain, perhaps alone in the world, has begun to reverse the process, and we must hope that next year at Locarno it will acknowledge as much, and be proud. As Gian-Carlo Bertelli said: "To go to somebody who makes wine, and ask for wine, and then they will not give you wine, there is no sense in it."

Team of troubles

The boys of the Rathcoole estate did not all play together, but they played together, which was surprising and exemplary as the estate was five miles from Belfast. Their football team had a Catholic name, Star of the Sea, and were good enough for Protestants to want to join. Boys coming along were observed not to see which foot they dug with but how well they could shoot. When the troubles started, Rathcoole, with a Catholic population of one in four, first seemed far enough away to preserve its harmony which was such, we heard last night, that even on July 12 Catholics joined in the fun.

What changed this live-and-let-live situation was the shift of populations caused by the troubles. By 1972, Protestants, made homeless elsewhere, were flocking in, bitter and demanding protection. Bricks instead of balls began to fly and Catholics, embittered in their turn, moved.

The Star of the Sea team struggled on, but togetherness was over. Three would go to prison for terrorist offences and one, Bobby Sands, would die there on hunger strike. BBC's Old Scores talked to former members of the team about how it was and is.

Not all friendships perished. That of Willie Caldwell, a Protestant, and Desie Black, a Catholic, has flourished but outside Ulster. Raymond McCord, a Protestant, told how he had tried to dissuade his colleagues from terrorizing Catholics. He had his nose and hands broken for his pains. He is now to emigrate to Australia with his family. Sooner or later, he thought, there would be a civil war and it would be impossible to sit on the fence. Mr McCord, a welder, had concluded that Ulster was no place for a rational man.

One Catholic, Dennis Sweeney, whose experience of violence led him to become a doctor, was fairly sanguine. He hoped his son would one day play for the Star of the Sea. The rationale for his optimism was not drawn from him. He did not blame any of his teammates for their involvement. It was practically impossible, he said, to live in a working-class district and not be caught up. It was a case of "There, but for the grace of God, go I".

That grade was not much evident in this sad little programme. Olenka Frenkel sounded purposeful but her questioning lacked incisiveness; often she seemed to be inquiring after footballing potential rather than motivation and altogether we were left with that old feeling of Ulster hopelessness.

Theatre

The Pit

Based on a realistic cause célèbre of 1551 and written about 40 years later Arden of Faversham is one of British theatre's earliest thrillers. Combining suspense and black humour - the murder is seven false attempts, stretching from the first act to the last - it reveals itself in performance as much better written than its solidly end-stopped lines suggest to a reader.

Its author remains unidentified. It is quite unlike Shakespeare or Marlowe and the strange mind that came up with it must rest content to be known as a major figure in its history as the Master of Arden and no more.

Terry Hands's production gets through it in barely two hours (no interval), with Kaitis Cook's set creating the bourgeois solidity of Thomas Arden's Faversham house with a canopy of branches overhanging furniture and floor of bare wood. Murder attempts by Arden's adulterous wife Alice even extend to his London lodgings at Aldersgate, making this a truly local Barbican play, but he finally meets death at his own Kentish fireside and the corpse is dragged to a patch of his own ground, greedily possessed from smaller landowners.

The motif of Arden's avarice,

condemned by some literary critics, ensures that audience sympathies have nowhere to rest, however pathetic a figure he may be in his desperate, almost suicidal cuckoldry - and Christopher Benjamin's Arden is pathetic, for all his porcine, bullying build. Jenny Agutter shows much ing on her under pressure in a horrid pre-echo of Thérèse Raquin, cannot help himself, and the machinery of lumbering murder attempts proceeds until victim and murderers are crushed alike.

Loaded with padding and protective ironmongery like Tweedledum, John Bowen's Black Will gives an Elizabethan cut-throat a laboured Doolittle voice as he staggers from failure to failure, raising his prey by having a bookstall shutter brain him in St Paul's churchyard or an unexpected lord greet Arden and spirit him away from some gloriously unprotected hearth.

More interesting is the Ardens' servant Michael (Mark Rylance), striding surly and apple-cheeked through this minefield and tempted by love of Mosby's sister to complicity beyond his powers. Black Will all but slits his pretty nose for one disaster and in return, after the murder, he recognizes his equality with the lordly culprit by some blatant insolence before he makes a crash mistake and delivers all of them to the stake or the gallows.

Such social aspects get their full value without detracting from the personal character of the tragedy. And tragedy, surprisingly, it is: murder, and the death of murderers is caught, in a silly and tragic waste. But the play remains excellent theatre, fascinating to anybody who loves Shakespeare, compelling to anyone at all.

Opera

Don Giovanni Coliseum

English National Opera begin their new season with a Don Giovanni in spruce condition on stage and orchestra magnificently; the promise is bright. John Stoddart's cavalier costumes and versatile timbers are fit by Roger Frith in a sequence of gorgeous nocturnes, within which the Anthony Beech production has been revived most ingeniously and intelligently by Peter Foster. Movement is easy and elegant, and made without any banal choreography of the action, to fit well with the pace and feeling of the music.

When nothing is needed to happen, nothing happens. But otherwise the opera is gently led forward in a way that allows musical numbers to emerge naturally from the behaviour and positioning of the characters.

In the middle of the second act, for instance, Don Ottavio has just taken leave of Elvira and the peasant couple when he turns to sing them "Il mio tesoro". It is not just a set piece but an adieu, and a touchingly lovely one as delivered here by Adrian Martin, who shows rare artistry in his ability to turn a phrase suddenly into silver, as he does also in his meaningful inflection of words.

The atmosphere on stage of calm elegance maintained through life-filled detail is well echoed in the pit, where Peter Robinson conducts the score even more marvelously than he did recently for Kent Opera. Nowhere is there a sense of pressure, not even in the supper scene, but instead phrase succeeds phrase in perfect balance and flow, and the texture is always held aloft in clear view. I wonder if the claret in this opera can ever have sounded so delicious, the trombones so awesome, and all without any sense of a conductor scoring points.

The cast is led, as before in this production, by Richard Van Allan, a saturnine Don Giovanni. Dark in tone yet beguiling in its movement, his voice seduces with invitations to hell that any but the meanest spirit would willingly accept. It also matches the singularly grave accents of the new Leporello.

Rather surprisingly this is Norman Bailey, who does not yet sound at ease with Mozart's quicker diction or with the business of playing the clown. His performance is a game one, but the style needs to be more secure in a production which shuns fussiness and leaves character to be established by voice and demeanour.

One who profits very much from this is Suzanne Murphy, singing with immense power as Donna Anna and yet holding to the vulnerability of tone that surrounds everything she does, even her brave and brilliant decoration with pathos. There is also a strong Commendatore from John Tranter, and Rodney Macann enters the company as a bluff Masetto.

Queen Elizabeth Hall

One could write a small book about the stimulating, infuriating but oddly satisfying performance of Bach's Goldberg Variations given at the Queen Elizabeth Hall on Monday.

Among contemporary pianists Andras Schiff may not have the most virtuosic manner, but he thinks enough for 10 pianists, and that is a gift to be prized. When he comes up with some seemingly zany notion - like ignoring Bach's own articulation of the 30 variations into the groups 1-15, 16-30 - you may be sure he has a deliberate plan in view.

He took us from 1 to 10 with scarcely a breath's pause, and then reached a huge climax; he made a similar climax in Variation 20, but suddenly ploughed straight on to 22 before taking another peak. Similarly, the character of each variation was clearly premeditated, even when, perversely, it reached as far as possible away from a harpsichord sound (the drowsy spinning-wheel of No 28) or from Bach's clear intention (the slow, misty polyphony of No 22, marked ad libitum).

But there was scarcely a thing in Schiff's playing that could be deemed unmusical, and there is the satisfaction: so many of the variations sounded simply beautiful, and one came to accept with happy equanimity the spangled chords and oddly drawn-out phrases.

Schiff played every repeat, even in the final aria, and invented some ingenious ornamentation at places I would have thought full of notes already. Sometimes the repeats just gave an excuse for a rather loose expressive broadening; twice, in 7 and 19, he transposed up an octave, and once, in 18, down an octave as if for a consort of bassoons.

The canons (which provide Bach's sub-pattern of articulation, occurring every three variations) were splendidly clear, though No 9, the canon at the third, with its expressive touch of B-A-C-H in part two, was surely gabbled too. Best of all was the deeply musical shaping of the most showy variations, 14, 20, 23 and 29, brilliant.

Concerts

Albert Hall/Radio 3

The annual choice of 140 players from 4,000 applicants for the European Community Youth Orchestra makes the successful candidates something of an individual elite from the outset. The final programme of their summer tour brought them to a Promenade Concert for the first time on Monday, and showed that Claudio Abbado, the musical director since the scheme began six years ago, can turn them into a true ensemble more quickly than before.

They were at near full strength for Wagner at the start and Richard Strauss at the end, and not many fewer for the Six Orchestral Pieces of Webern. Maybe it did mark his centenary year, but as an orchestral test piece it is among the most demanding of its kind, and the young players (aged 14 to 23) responded with purposeful attack and clear focus of detail, engagingly reverberant in this hall, and played with instinctive understanding.

Intimations of mortality, much less of transfiguration, are unlikely to be matters of everyday thought to these players, but it was precisely the absence of guile that gave a convincing intensity to the Death and Transfiguration tone-poem of Strauss, and even made the effulgent C major of its fulfilment a desirable place to be. Wagner's A Faust Overture at the start of the concert also converted yearning to aspiration with admirable directness.

Natalia Gutman brought a strangely matter-of-fact approach to Schumann's Cello Concerto, her fine-spun tone seldom rising above mezzoforte even where otherwise called for, and often relying on a sotto voce effect that left the music sounding bland and emotionless.

Everybody seemed to be mustered for "The Death of Tybalt" from Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet as a vivid first encore. I missed the second, having by then become inebriated at the antics of a hall steward who ruined the quiet start to the Webern by his late door-closing, as he likewise did the equally soft ending to the Strauss by opening up every door to the street some 10 bars before the music finished.

Lucien Pissarro

Anthony d'Offay

If you are trying to be the famous son of a famous father, the disadvantages can very easily outweigh the advantages. The case of Lucien Pissarro is a classic example. As his correspondence with his father attests, he seems to have got on very well with Camille, though naturally not without minor disagreements: they even worked together on a series of woodcuts which perfectly balance the distinct approaches of the two men. But, then, cutting on wood was something Lucien knew about and Camille did not. Painting was something else again.

Thus the story told by the absorbing exhibition Lucien Pissarro: Paintings, at Anthony d'Offay until Saturday, and by the sumptuous Catalogue of the Oil Paintings of Lucien Pissarro by Anne Thorold which it accompanies (Athelney Books, 400 copies, £80), is one of gradual liberation. The earliest works in the show, such as those painted at Enghien in the 1880s, are rather like Camille at his least appealing, oddly heavy, sludgy and over-worked. The landscapes capture slightly where Lucien moves to England, but again such pleasingly exotic subjects for a French painter as Shunting at Acon (1907) still recall Camille's evocations of English railway scenery, and a touch of Monet in a subject like A Foggy Morning, Morlaix does not much alter our image of heavy dependence.

Yet curiously, in his woodcut book illustrations, both black-and-white and colour, Lucien had by this time for several years been producing something distinctively his own - possibly because here there was no competition with the father, and so no sense of inevitable inferiority. It seems to be only more than a decade after Camille's death in 1903 that the inhibition gradually relaxes, and Lucien's oils get more and more easy and personal.

A painting like Brume de

Mer, Coney Castle of 1919 has an almost oriental delicacy and precision of outline quite unlike what Lucien was painting before, and the later paintings of the Thames at Chiswick have an impressive lightness and immediacy. One can see why Sickert admired him, and why he was at home among the Camden Town painters and the New English Art Club. Famously enough, he came to be recognized as a repository of tradition at just the point that he himself ceased to be too heavily dependent on it. He was not only at home in England, he had come home, and entered into his patrimony all the more securely by repudiating it.

Law Report

August 17, 1983

No judicial review of domestic tribunals

Before Lord Justice Lawton, Lord Justice Fox and Lord Justice Slade (Judgment delivered July 29)

The purpose of section 31 of the Supreme Court Act 1981 was to regulate procedure in relation to judicial review, not to extend the jurisdiction of the court to put into statutory language, with modifications, what was in Order 53 of the Rules of the Supreme Court which introduced reform in the practice and procedure relating to administrative law. Section 31 did not purport to enlarge the jurisdiction of the court so as to enable it to review the decisions of domestic tribunals.

The House of Appeal so held, dismissing an appeal by the defendants, the National Greyhound Racing Club (NGRC) from the decision by Mr Justice Walton that the NGRC was liable to pay costs in proceedings brought by the claimant, a member of the NGRC, for breach of contract in relation to a greyhound race.

Section 31 of the Supreme Court Act 1981 provides: "(1) An application to the High Court for one or more of the following orders of relief, namely - (a) an order of mandamus, prohibition or certiorari; (b) a declaration or injunction under subsection (2); shall be made in accordance with rules of court by a procedure to be known as an application for judicial review."

"(2) A declaration may be made or an injunction granted under an application in any case where an application for judicial review, as defined in subsection (1), has been made and the High Court considers that having regard to - (a) the nature of the matters in respect of which relief may be granted by orders of mandamus, prohibition or certiorari; (b) the nature of the persons and bodies against whom relief may be granted; and (c) all the circumstances of the case, it would be just and convenient for the declaration to be made or the injunction to be granted, as the case may be."

Mr Roger Henderson, QC and Mr Adrian Turner for the NGRC; Mr Anthony Scriven, QC and Mr Ian Crawford for the plaintiff.

LORD JUSTICE LAWTON said that by originating summons issued on February 11, 1983, the plaintiff, who trained racing greyhounds, asked the court to grant him a declaration that the decision made by the Stewards of the NGRC on December 9, 1982 in so far as they purported to suspend the plaintiff's trainers' licence was void and ultra vires the stewards' powers in that the action amounted to a breach of the implied term of the agreement between the plaintiff and NGRC that all actions taken by the stewards which could deprive the plaintiff of his licence would be on reasonable grounds.

The NGRC tried to persuade Mr Justice Walton that the plaintiff's claim was misconceived because it had not valued complaint about the way the stewards had treated him but should have applied for judicial review. They failed.

They had tried to persuade the Court of Appeal that, on the correct construction of section 31 of the Supreme Court Act 1981, when a domestic tribunal was alleged to have made, in abuse of its powers, a decision which affected a member of the public or the public generally, the complaint had to apply for judicial review and could not succeed by way of an action or an originating summons for either a declaration or an injunction.

In a judgment of the Court of Appeal on October 16, 1981, in a restrictive practice case unsuccessfully brought against the NGRC, Lord Justice Wilber referred to the NGRC as a limited company whose objects included acting as the judicial body for the discipline and conduct of greyhound racing in England, Wales and Scotland.

Of 107 greyhound racing stadia in Great Britain 48 were licensed by the NGRC, the remainder were unlicensed by them. A principal objective of the rules of the NGRC was to achieve an orderly and viable method of conducting greyhound racing in England, Wales and Scotland. The NGRC licensed, among others, race courses, race owners, executives, trainers and owners.

The NGRC issued rules of racing and had appointed stewards who had no financial interest in greyhound racing to enforce them. Trainers of greyhounds racing at licensed stadia themselves had to be licensed and if their licences were suspended they could not act as trainers during the period of suspension.

One of the malpractices the stewards had to deal with was the doping of greyhounds. The rules gave the stewards power to do so by imposing penalties, including suspension of his licence, upon any licensed trainer who, under rule 174(a)(1) "has in his charge a greyhound which on examination ... shows presence in its tissues of any substance which by its nature could affect the performance of a greyhound."

On December 9, 1982 the stewards held an inquiry which the plaintiff attended and decided that he had had in his charge a greyhound which on examination showed a presence in its tissues of substances which would affect its performance. They suspended his trainer's licence for six months. The plaintiff had challenged that decision in his summons.

In his Lordship's judgment powers as the stewards had to suspend the plaintiff's licence were derived from a contract between him and the NGRC. That was so for all who took part in greyhound racing in stadia licensed by the NGRC.

A stewards' inquiry under the NGRC rules of racing concerned only those who voluntarily submitted themselves to the stewards' jurisdiction. There was no public element in the jurisdiction itself.

Consequently the public generally could flow from the decisions of many domestic tribunals. In the past the courts had always refused to use the order of certiorari to review the decisions of such tribunals since their authority was derived solely from contract, by agreement of the parties concerned.

Before the Supreme Court Act 1981 was passed Mr Henderson had accepted that anyone aggrieved by a decision of a domestic tribunal could only proceed by way of a claim for damages or for relief by way of a declaration or an injunction. The old case of The King v Bencher of Lincoln's Inn (1825) 48 and 485 was no authority to the contrary.

Mr Henderson had submitted however that section 31 of the Supreme Court Act 1981 had given the court jurisdiction to entertain judicial review of the proceedings of a domestic tribunal if, as in the present case, those proceedings were likely to have consequences affecting the public generally. He based his submission upon the use of the word "shall" in section 31(1) and the terms of subsection (2) of the Act.

Broadcasting Corporation, Ex parte Lavell (1983) 1 WLR 23 that there was nothing in Order 53, rule 1 or section 31 of the 1981 Act which expressly excluded the circumstances in which the prerogative orders of mandamus, prohibition or certiorari were available. Those remedies were not previously available to enforce private rights but were available to enforce public rights.

He said that although applications for judicial review were not confined to those cases where relief could be granted by way of prerogative order, he regarded the wording of Order 53, rule 1 and section 31(2) of the 1981 Act as making it clear that the application for judicial review was confined to reviewing the exercise of public powers as opposed to those of a purely private or domestic character.

His Lordship agreed with Mr Justice Woolf. Support for what he said was implicit in two decisions of the House of Lords, O'Brien v Mackinnon ([1982] 3 WLR 1056) and Cocks v Thanet District Council ([1982] 1 WLR 1121). He would dismiss the appeal.

LORD JUSTICE FOX, agreeing, said that the authority of the stewards to suspend the licence of the plaintiff derived wholly from a contract between the plaintiff and the NGRC. He saw nothing to suggest that the NGRC had rights or duties relating to members of the public as such.

What the NGRC did in relation to the control of greyhound racing might affect a section of the public but their powers in relation to the matters with which the present case was concerned were contractual.

As to the effect produced by the amendments to the Rules of Court and by the 1981 Act, it seemed to his Lordship that the power under Order 53 to grant an injunction or to make a declaration was only exercisable in cases where, previously to the change in the rules, the applicant could have obtained a prerogative order, and the remedy was in the realm of public law only.

His Lordship saw nothing in the Supreme Court Act 1981 which suggested any parliamentary intention to extend the scope of the prerogative orders. He agreed that the appeal should be dismissed.

New structure will make management task easier

Citibank and Lloyds in surprise deal over Grindlays ownership

By Peter Wilson-Smith, Banking Correspondent

Lloyds Bank and Citibank have agreed after years of fruitless discussion on proposals to sort out the tangled, restricting ownership structure of Grindlays Bank in which they both have a large stake.

The agreement will leave Citibank in a dominant position controlling 48.6 per cent of the publicly-quoted Grindlays Holdings, which in turn will own all of Grindlays Bank. Lloyds will have 21.3 per cent.

Citibank will be fully committed to expanding Grindlays as an independent bank.

Under the present structure, Grindlays Bank is 49 per cent owned by Citibank and 51 per cent by Grindlays Holdings, which in turn is 41.4 per cent owned by Lloyds.

The nature of the shareholding reorganization came as a surprise because it was well known for some time that Citibank had been looking to sell its stake. It was widely expected that Lloyds would emerge as the dominant shareholder.

So Citibank appears to have recently reassessed its position.

The new scheme, which has to be passed by Grindlays Holdings shareholders at an extraordinary meeting, has the approval of the Bank of England, and the Takeover Panel is expected to waive any obligation for Citibank to make a full bid.

Shareholders in Grindlays Holdings are also being compensated with a 5.6p special dividend in recognition of the advantage Citibank is drawing from the proposals.

The scheme came at an important moment for Grindlays, which has undergone a long haul recovering from problems brought on by the secondary banking and property crisis in the mid-1970s.

In the last year or so it has made several big disposals as part of a move to realign its business, but the shareholding structure has long been recognized as unsatisfactory.

Mr Alec Ritchie, deputy chairman, who will now be taking over as chairman from Mr Nigel Rodon, said yesterday: "It's a new era for the bank." He said that Grindlays would now be able to move forward.

Citibank said that it has no intention of raising its stake in said that the old shareholding structure had been a "kind of veto situation and nobody was really happy." He said that the proposals made sense and were in the interests of the bank.

Shares in Grindlays Holdings which were recently at 207p on takeover rumours, rose 23p yesterday to close at 182p.

City analysts have remained puzzled about the bank's strategic direction. With only one big shareholder, the task of management is expected to be easier. It will also be easier, if Grindlays finds it necessary, to raise fresh capital through a rights issue.

Grindlays had total assets of £308m at the end of 1982 and profits last year were £29m compared with £34.5m in 1981.

£50m profit for Royal Insurance

By Andrew Cornallius

Royal Insurance yesterday reported a sharp increase in interim pretax profits but undermined the importance of a recovery in the US insurance market to the company's fortunes.

Pretax profits in the six months to June 30 totalled £50.1m against £32m at the same stage last year. But increase in investment income from £115.4m to £135.4m helped mask the problems in the US market which led to another increase in underwriting losses. The losses grew from last year's record level of £94m to £99.3m this time, with US losses up from £50.8m to £72.5m.

Mr John Howard, chief general manager, says that the US is still the main problem area where 41 per cent of Royal's non-life business is transacted. It is also the area which offers most room for improvement in the group in the short term, he says.

As yet there is little evidence of any recovery in the US market, but Royal is hoping that its action to increase prices and turn away bad business will lead to better results by the end of this year.

The key to United States recovery is an improvement in the economy which will help the three main problem lines of business: commercial risks, and commercial and personal motor business. Stagnant growth in United States premium income will be corrected by the acquisition of at least one United States insurance company over the next few months.

In the United Kingdom premium volume increased by 6 per cent to contribute towards an increase in total group premium income from £867m to £968.5m this time. The United Kingdom results benefited from better weather and a hardening of commercial rates. No further rate increases are envisaged for motor or household lines, despite a 37 per cent increase in theft claims in the first quarter of the year.

The improvement in the Canadian underwriting performance continued with losses cut from £11.1m to £2.8m. Australia also recovered in the second quarter.

Royal Life contributed £8.2m to profits, against £6.6m. A 350 per cent increase in United Kingdom ordinary life business will be reflected in future profits.

£325,000 flat for LRC chief

By Vivien Goldsmith

LRC International yesterday disclosed that it has spent £325,000 on a luxury three-bedroom flat for its chief executive, Mr Alan Woltz.

The company, whose interests range from rubber gloves to contraceptives and baby gripe water, are adamant that the money was well spent.

The finance director, Mr Paul Bristow, said that the flat, which is held on a 66-year lease, should increase in value.

"We expect Mr Woltz, who is 50, to remain our chief executive until he retires in 10 years. One could buy a flat for much less but it would be on a short lease and it would fall in value."

The purchase price of the flat, in the West End of London, accounted for between two-thirds and three-quarters of the total cost: the rest was spent on redecoration and legal fees.

Mr Woltz has his own home in New York. Last year, LRC paid £26,214 for his rented London house.

Mr Bristow said that he did not expect any reaction from shareholders. "We did look at the Marks and Spencer reaction. But that case was quite different. They didn't tell the shareholders, and the directors had an interest in the property. Mr Woltz has no option to buy."

Mr Woltz is paid in dollars. His salary rose last year from $283,675 to $331,461.

Mr Bristow said that the purchase of the property was mentioned in the accounts so that shareholders would be fully aware of what was happening.

World speculators drop the dollar

By Wayne Lintott

The dollar weakened sharply against other leading currencies yesterday as speculative funds left it now that hopes for higher American interest rates have receded.

The lower-than-expected rise in the US money supply and a slowdown in the growth rate of the country's economy caused widespread markdowns of the dollar's international value.

The dollar fell 1.5 cents to 1.5060 against the pound, more than five pence against the Deutschmark to 2.6635 and three cents against the Swiss franc to 2.1435.

Ironically, it was the big currency futures market in Chicago which started the selling when it opened for trading at 2pm London time. Earlier, European action against the dollar had been easily absorbed.

Monday's booming stock market action in London proved short-lived yesterday. The market opened higher but the failure of American markets to follow suit caused some hefty profit-taking and by the close the FT index was unchanged at 732.8.

Gilt-edged stock led Monday's climb but prices slipped by up to 50p yesterday as US bond markets held steady.

Tace sell-off to raise £3m

Tace is to float off its high technology subsidiary, Goring Kerr, with a full listing on the stock market which will raise about £3m by way of a tender offer. The cash will pay off Tace's high borrowings and provide research and development funds.

Tace's general manager, Mr

Richard Richardson, also confirmed that Tace's profits this year will be substantially greater than last year's £413,000.

But Tace's shareholders will get no preferential treatment if they subscribe for the Goring Kerr shares. London and Northern are big shareholders with 30 per cent.

A Polish lesson for the bankers

Western bankers and Polish officials met in Vienna yesterday in yet another of the seemingly interminable rounds of talks aimed at rescheduling the country's massive debts.

According to bankers in London this meeting is one of the most important of the season - which may or may not turn out to be the case. But what is apparent is that the banks are beginning to be a bit more realistic, or perhaps pessimistic, about the how and when they are going to get their money back.

longer-term view. There are and increasing number of such schemes in blueprint, but what is now needed is for them to be given some impetus so that they actually are put into effect.

Perhaps, therefore, the more realistic view being taken of Poland's problems is the most hopeful sign of progress in the debt crisis.

A key shift in their position is that they are now willing to consider a rescheduling programme which stretches over 10 years whereas in the past the longest extension they have been prepared to tolerate has been just over seven years.

The Institute is more confident of a warm welcome from the new Tory MPs.

The ability of the public to check on facts and figures of Britain's 900,000 registered companies is a vital part of the system by which the United Kingdom controls corporate behaviour.

They have made this concession, not through any particular altruism, but rather because they have come to accept that Poland's case is so grave there is virtually no chance of getting their money back earlier whatever deal they strike with the Polish authorities. But whatever the dubious origins of this change of heart it is not only welcome but deserves a wider application.

The danger inherent in most of the debt talks with countries other than Poland is that the banks are still insisting on hammering out terms which are so strict that they do not solve the problem so much as put it off for a few years. Short-term agreements may look better from the point of view of the banks' balance sheets, but they often mean that the countries will face a repayment bill in the late 1980s which they have virtually no chance of meeting. So the crisis could erupt again then.

The question of whether information is kept by the state or a private body, should centre on companies registering their accounts and returns on time. At present, most are late.

The real need, therefore, is for the central banks and agencies like the International Monetary Fund to accept the need to take a Exchange Rates The results for the quarter and the half-year and the comparative figures for 1982 have been translated at comparable rates of exchange. These are based on £1=Fl.4 23=U.S. $1.61, which were the closing rates of 1982. An exception has been made for the results that have arisen in hyper-inflationary economies, which for the current quarter and current half-year have been translated at forecast closing rates for 1983. The profit attributable to ordinary capital for the current quarter and current half-year has also been translated at the rates of exchange current at the end of June 1983 being based on £1=Fl.4 36=U.S. $1.53.

Results In the second quarter of 1983 sales value was 3% higher than in the corresponding quarter of 1982 but, because of lower sales in UAC International, volume was 1% down. Operating profit was up by 6%.

In North America our operations in total continued to make good progress; both Lever Brothers and National Starch had substantially improved results compared with last year.

In Europe, results were higher compared with the second quarter of 1982. Sales volume in the consumer groups rose by 1%. There were also improved results in most consumer groups, particularly in edible fats and dairy, food and drinks and detergents.

UAC International's sales volume and results were significantly down on last year as a result of continued difficult trading conditions in Nigeria and also in Francophone Africa.

The results of frozen products, however, were down on last year. While there were signs of recovery in chemicals and better results than last year in animal feeds and paper, plastics and packaging, transport did significantly less well and the total results of the industrial groups were lower. In this quarter, restructuring costs, mainly in the United Kingdom, were largely offset by the profit on the disposal of our shareholding in International Stores.

Elsewhere outside Europe and North America sales volume, including good contributions from our recent acquisitions in Chile and the Ivory Coast, showed a significant increase and total results were higher than last year.

The drop in the concern share of associated companies' profit reflects the lower results of UAC of Nigeria, in which we have an interest of 40%.

INVESTORS' NOTEBOOK • edited by Michael Prest

Why Holmes à Court's bid is a serious one

It is undoubtedly one of Mr Robert Holmes à Court's more agreeable characteristics that he has lost none of his capacity to surprise. But the distinctly cheeky bid for Broken Hill Proprietary is not a diversion contrived over the weekend between taking control of the instantly famous Wigmores and offering two of its shares at A$6 each for every one BHP.

The idea was conceived a decade ago, when Mr Holmes à Court contemplated using Albion Woolen Mills for the purpose, and it is entirely serious.

Firstly, however, it is important to be clear about what Mr Holmes à Court is not doing. He does not expect to take over BHP - indeed, success in that direction could be embarrassing - and he does not hold BHP shares whose value he is just promoting. The truth is more complicated and more constructive.

Mr Holmes à Court aims to increase cheaply and at a stroke the fund-raising powers of his interests. If all went to plan it could work like this: acquiring 5 per cent of BHP's equity or 17 million shares would turn Wigmores into a company with A$260m (£154m) in assets and liabilities of A$18m, while the number of issued Wigmores shares would go up to 41 million and shareholders' funds to A$242. Supported by the BHP shares, which are almost as good as cash in Australia, Wigmores could raise A$200m to add to the A$200m credit line available to the Bell Group. Mr Holmes à Court would then search for a real takeover.

In the event, Wigmores will be lucky to receive 5 per cent in acceptance. Possibly that is just as well because the company can only fund dividends on up to 4 per cent from internal resources. A 1 per cent acceptance would be equivalent to a fully-priced rights issue.

More should be known next week when the offer goes out to BHP shareholders, who will have a month to decide. BHP shares rose yesterday to within a whisker of the Wigmores offer price. But the assumption underlying the strategy is that enough of BHP's 178,000 shareholders will be enticed by the thought of Wigmores - probably stripped of the Caterpillar franchise - becoming a takeover vehicle.

They may remember that the capitalization of the Bell Group has risen from A$160,000 a decade ago to A$500m today. The surprises are not over.

Unilever

Pre-tax profit £391m (£394m)
Stated earnings 50.81p (£4.11p)
Turnover £8.68m (£8.52m)
Share price 785p Yield 5.2%

Swings and roundabouts are never motionless at Unilever, so the problems of West Africa and continued slow growth in European sales did not stop the consumer products group from slightly exceeding expectations. Second quarter sales were 3 per cent higher at £3,400m, while pre-tax profits for the same period rose by twice as much to £228m.

By almost making up for a poor first quarter, Unilever has encouraged hopes that full-year pre-tax profits could be as high as £770m against £723m last year.

Overall, the progress has been achieved, externally, by better conditions, which generated higher volumes and wider margins, and internally by continued attention to productivity and reorganization. Reconstruction costs of about £15m were offset by the sale to BAT of the International Stores stake.

On the products side, frozen foods showed little progress, with ice-cream sales sluggish. But margins were better on other foods, with Walls trading in the black and John West improving.

The new range of Thomas Lipton teas launched in Britain has flopped and is being reviewed, but Lipton Export increased sales, particularly in the Middle and Far East.

Detergents have held their market share, despite the fierce competition, and sales and market share of personal products are up 1/2. The industrial companies were dragged down by problems with the transport businesses, but chemicals are recovering. Paper only broke even.

Lever Brothers and National Starch are profitable in the United States, although a new Lever product launch could push it back into the red for one quarter.

Gilts

After its biggest one-day gain for nearly three months on Monday, the gilt-edged market was still a hive of activity yesterday. But the emphasis was more on switching and on clearing the decks for today's new, £800m tap.

The Bank of England's gamble on good US money-supply figures helping to rally the market seems to have paid off. Expectations of at least a respite in the rise in American interest rates have fuelled investors' interests in bond markets. There are also signs that the building societies, now attracting more funds since they increased their rates, have been preparing to apply for the new stock.

The tap, 10 per cent Treasury convertible, 1986, is still rather dear as a long, but was looking about 2 1/2, cheap as a short yesterday and this should ensure a fairly good reception for the stock at today's tender. The question now is whether the market is set for a sustained rally. Certainly, the upward pressure on British interest rates seems to have eased, and with inflation likely to remain moderate, yields approaching 12 per cent the long end of the gilt market are looking attractive.

International Investment Trust of Jersey has declared its offer for Crosby House, the freight, forwarding and container storage group, unconditional as to acceptance. It has received acceptance for nearly 1m ordinary shares, of 67.9 per cent of the issued share capital not already owned by it.

Cowan de Groot's offshoot, Dekker, which makes spider-man suits and Wendy Houses, made profits of about £700,000 last year, but the rest of the group lost money.

The result was that the group made only £224,000 in pre-tax profit, a 40 per cent fall on last year, in the year half barely breaking even. The profits were struck after taking account of £439,000 of losses charged up by its Chilton and Hatfield Machinery interests, which have since been sold.

After extraordinary costs relating to the disposals and tax, the group lost £513,000 and will have to dig deep into reserves to pay a maintained final dividend of 1p.

However, better is expected this year when it expects to make at least enough profit to pay for dividends that have been costing more than £400,000 a year. Mr Derrick Cowan, the chairman, says that the group has a target of restoring its former higher-dividend level on a fully-covered basis next year.

The company is soon to appoint a chief executive for the first time. Mr Cowan and Mr Lashore, Williams, have been acting as joint managing directors. Mr Cowan will remain as chairman and Mr Williams will stay on the board until September 1984.

Mr Laurence Roberts has recently been appointed a director to seek new areas of operation.

Mr Roy Moss, managing director of Dekker, has also been appointed to the board.

Intasun rise

Intasun Leisure Group's chairman, Mr Harry Goodman, yesterday confirmed at the group's annual meeting what trade surveys have been showing for a few months that Intasun is one of the two package holiday companies gaining in this summer's trading. Intasun summer trading up to August 6 rose 27 per cent over the same period last year. Thomson Holidays which cut its prices also gained.

The engineers fight back - 2: Susan Bevan with the second of a series

New-look TI improves but has it done enough?

After a battering at the heart of the metal industries, TI Group, which was better known as Tube Investments, is showing signs of recuperation. A slimmer and very different looking group last week reported pretax profits of £6.2m for the first half of this year.

That compares well with only £4.7m for the whole of last year, but is a long way from the annual profits of almost £80m TI was notching up five years ago.

"What groups like us have had to do is reduce our dependence on those parts of engineering which don't have a future," said Sir Brian Kellert, chairman of TI.

"The whole process of restructuring TI has been to change the mix of the business away from the heavy end of the industry and the commodity type of business."

On its way through the fire, TI has changed its name and sold its London headquarters. More materially, it has shed its aluminium business and the last of its steel interests.

Branded consumer products have become the white horse for profits this year. Products with high value added that can prosper through recession are the new keys to the larger specialist engineering division, which is taking over the running from the commodity-like tubes of the traditional business.

The process has been painful. TI's workforce has been halved in three years to 32,000. The cost of closures, redundancies and the loss of the sale of the British Aluminium amounted to £30m over 1981 and 1982.

Net assets employed in the business have dropped from £554m in the 1979 balance sheet to £328m at the end of last year. Out of this total specialist engineering products now account for 35 per cent, against only 13 per cent three years ago. Consumer products, mainly domestic appliances and a heavily pruned and revamped Raleigh cycle business, have

For example, the period of expansion of the steel industry is over.

There are technical trends, too. The volume of the machine tool industry is less than it was partly because of the recession but partly due to the industry's own success in producing advanced tools that last longer.

Even before the recession took hold it was recognized, within TI as well as outside, that the group faced structural headwinds. Its main profit-earners were in mature or declining markets.

After reorienting itself in the late 1960s, after the loss through nationalization of much of its steel business, TI put life into the tubes business and the construction of the doomed Liverpool aluminium smelter.

With hindsight, too much attention was paid to producing intermediate goods where marketing and innovation play a small part.

It still remains to be seen whether TI has yet done enough to secure its future. Market hopes for this year, taking into account a bumper second half for domestic appliances and a recovery in machine tools, are for pretax profits of about £20m - still not much of a return on capital employed of nearly £350m. Uncertainty continues to hang over bicycles and steel tubes. There is not much TI can do about the latter but it is putting its back into Raleigh.

Even with its big bicycle brand names, TI Raleigh was criticized for depending too much on bulk sales to what proved unstable Third World markets, and as a complacent monopoly which succumbed to cheap imports at home.

Since the dark days of 1981, when TI's cycle and toy division lost £10.5m, Raleigh has undergone a complete rethink from production methods to marketing. Employment is down by a third, the range has been both rationalized and redesigned and the stress has moved to selling bikes as consumer goods for the fashion-conscious.

Some £7m will be spent on the revamp this year and the cautious Sir Brian has "great confidence" in the division's future. "We have a very young and active management bringing this business back to shape," he says.

The big success of the BMX burner for boys has helped Raleigh to restore its share of the British market to its pre-crisis 50 per cent from a low of 33 per cent in 1981. But there is still a long way to go if the business is to return to the big profits of five years ago.

Many TI followers believe the money and attention could be better spent elsewhere and cheer rumours like those last week suggesting a Japanese buyer for the bikes.

But the increased emphasis on consumer products - washing machines, heaters and kettles with names like Creda, Glow-Worm and Russell Hobbs - is paying dividends.

This division produced £10m of the £14.1m trading profit total for the half year. Meanwhile a new approach to Raleigh bicycles - no longer a commodity pumped into insecure Third World markets but a highly promoted style-conscious business catering to trendy Europeans - has set this long-making division on the way to break even this year.

Sir Brian, who has frequently poured cold water over premature forecasts of recovery, is more confident now but characteristically not over-exuberant.

"What we are seeing is the economy coming up with a consumer-led boom but it will be a slow process for it to spread through and ultimately bring up heavy capital investment."

"I don't think there is any doubt that the volume of world demand for some of these heavy products will be less in the future than at times in the past."

A good move here has been the acquisition in 1981 of the American group King Fifth Wheel. The £25.6m purchase is Sir Brian's favourite example of the group's direction today.

KFW represents an important move both into higher technology engineering and the United States market. Its flash-welded rings, an important component of aircraft gas turbine engines, dovetails neatly with the business of TI Reynolds, which is the leading supplier of these products to the European aerospace industry.

At the same time KFW's subsidiary, Abar, is the United States leader in another high technology growth area - vacuum heat treating furnaces used in the production of sophisticated alloys.

Demand for the aircraft components is depressed but KFW made a profit of almost £5m in the year before its purchase and Sir Brian is "looking forward with relief" to the time when the airlines are back on the buying trail.

Another bright spot is Crane Packing which leads the way in mechanical seals, scattered in thousands in industrial plants - and needing constant replacement whatever the stage of the business cycle. Similarly, good business is being won in garage equipment.

In machine tools, TI Matrix and TI Churchill are now half the size they were two years ago. The focus now is on computer-controlled tools designed with a close eye on consumer requirements. It is hoped these machines will fend off the Japanese threat in the reviving market place.

While TI is now hoping to make more than the former owner from the Alfred Herbert range of computer controlled lathes which it bought from the receiver for £350,000, the industry clearly is still in a state of flux.

Steel tubes remain a big problem, though capacity has been radically pruned at the commodity end of the business. Talks go on with British Steel on a concerted rationalization of the industry and some outcome from these will be the most important element in the saga of TI's struggle back.

Tomorrow: Vickers

W H Smith names cable section chief

W H Smith: Mr Francis Baron has become managing director of the new cable services division.

Lloyds Bank: Mr J. P. B. Hadfield has been appointed a regional director of the North West regional board.

Bank of America: Mr John Adshad has been promoted senior vice president and appointed to the new position of head of personnel and administration, based in London.

AE Group: Mr Alan Arnott has become deputy managing director, AE Auto Parts, Mr Peter Adcock has become managing director, Edmunds Walker & Co, with responsibility for the activities of Edmunds Walker (Holdings).

UMECO Holdings: Mr G. R. A. Metcalfe has been appointed group managing director.

Hunting Gate Developments: Mr Malcolm MacPherson has been made a director.

European Ferries: Mr Roger Bridgwood has joined the board after six years as the company's financial controller. He will continue to combine control of the group's finances with coordination of European Ferries property developments in Britain and the US.

T. Hargreaves Group: Mr D. Stevenson becomes director in charge of overseas developments and Dr M. R. Scott assumes the responsibility as chairman of energy division previously held by Mr Stevenson. Dr Scott will retain his responsibilities as planning and marketing director.

Freshwater Biological Association: Dr Robin Clarke has been appointed director of the association from October 1. He will succeed Mr David Le Cren, who is retiring.

Appleford: Mr Cyril Hehir has joined the company, which is part of the Vine Products Group, as managing director designate to succeed Mr Neville Kirby, Mr Kirby, who became chairman of Appleford, remains on the board of Vine Products.

Warner Lambert UK: Mr John Telford Beasley, managing director and president of the UK, Ireland and "Commonwealth" African region, and Mr Hector Graham, president of the France, North West Africa and Middle East region, have exchanged posts. Mr James Hamilton who has retired as export director for Warner Lambert, has been succeeded by Mr Edwin Bay, previously operations director. He is succeeded by Mr Colin Clark, director of the Company's Parke-Davis factory in Pontypool, responsibilities which he will retain.

Racal. Twenty-eighth consecutive record year.

Sales of strategic radio were well down on forecast but there are now encouraging signs of improvement. After a difficult period of trading, contracts worth a total of nearly £22,000,000 have been recently awarded and further substantial orders for specialised systems in both civil and military environments are at advanced stages of negotiations. There is good potential throughout the world for our extensive range of communications electronic warfare (EW) equipment for surveillance, direction finding and jamming.

Marine Electronics

This business is now directed through one organisation which controls and co-ordinates the activities of 24 UK and overseas companies. Plans for expansion in a number of key areas - navigation, radar, controls, simulation and service - are centralised within this group with particular emphasis on total systems.

Defence Radar & Avionics

During the year sales grew strongly to reach £81,751,000, of which defence radar contributed £66,000,000, this being three times more than that of 1980.

The many contracts being won for radar electronic warfare (EW) systems demonstrate the group's growth in this fast developing area. Some 25 years of experience in designing, developing and manufacturing EW systems has enabled Racal to emerge as a leading authority in defence systems for all environments on land, at sea and in the air. A notable success was a £20,000,000 order for the supply of advanced electronics support measures (ESM) systems for Royal Navy submarines. Further naval orders in excess of £50,000,000 are confidently expected over the next few weeks.

Increasing participation in major collaborative programmes has resulted in a joint agreement with Westland Helicopters to develop avionics management systems.

Energy Resources

Sales reached £45,038,000 in a difficult year for those involved in the oil related industries.

The formation of an energy resources group has brought together specialist companies involved in precise positioning and offshore survey technologies, principally for the oil and gas industries throughout the world.

Other Activities

These account for the remaining £122,105,000 of sales. It is interesting to note that this figure is as large as the turnover for the entire Racal Group as recently as 1977.

The other businesses are:- acoustics, antennas, computer-aided engineering, communications security, data & communications recording, financial terminal systems, health & safety, intruder detection, logistic support and automatic/diagnostic test systems, measurement technology, microelectronics, microwave components & systems.

Cellular Radio

Our successful application for the private sector licence to operate a nationwide public telecommunications service based on cellular radio technology, has opened up an exciting new business opportunity. The licence, which runs for 25 years, permits us to set up and operate a system which will provide portable access to the public telephone network on a vast scale.

We foresee a significant sales turnover around 1990, with profit margin at least comparable to that currently achieved by the Group as a whole.

Pay Television

We in Britain stand on the brink of a television revolution already referred to as the third age of broadcasting.

The Group, through its equal joint venture partnership with Oak Industries Inc. of California, is already involved in this new area not only in the United Kingdom but throughout Europe. Racal-Oak Limited, our recently formed associate company, blends together our own expertise with that of Oak Industries, a United States market leader in many aspects of pay television.

Overseas Sales

Deliveries outside the United Kingdom amounted to £592,000,000, an increase of 14% over the corresponding figure for last year and represent 70% of total sales. Exports from the UK maintained Racal's position in the top twenty league table.

Research and Development

Racal has from its earliest days been committed to a policy of funding the great majority of its R & D from its own resources to develop proprietary products for the world market. This policy has been continued with an increasing proportion of product developments, in the areas of business acquired with Decca, being handled this way.

Appreciation

The skill and dedication of our staff was formally recognised last November, when our Company was named as the winner of the 1982 United Kingdom Business Enterprise Award. I am certain that it will be your wish to join me in congratulating all the members of the Racal team for their tremendous efforts which have done so much to put our Company in the position it now holds in the world of professional electronics. Additionally, we should thank most sincerely their families for their loyalty, encouragement and understanding which is essential for our success and is so greatly appreciated.

The Future

The former Decca group of companies is now going forward strongly. The major problem remaining to be solved is the elimination of the losses being incurred in the field of small boat radar and this year we expect to go a long way towards achieving that goal. The defence radar company is especially successful - its order book is large and growing and the future prospects are most encouraging.

Several of our smaller businesses are progressing well, any of which could develop into a major activity.

The award of the cellular radio licence was one of the most exciting events in the history of Racal. In the short term, trading losses will be incurred and a substantial investment will need to be made whilst the system is being evolved and introduced. However, it is anticipated that by 1987/88 trading profits will be earned and that by the early 1990s the operation will be cash positive. Cellular radio will undoubtedly be a substantial contributor to our future earnings.

The combination of our existing businesses, our product development policy and the new growth areas, such as cellular radio and pay television, will ensure the continued growth of the Company in the years ahead.

At March 31st, 1983 the Company had net cash of some £3,000,000 compared with net borrowings of £46,000,000 the year before. This cash position will improve considerably throughout the year and earnings will benefit as a consequence.

With regard to the current financial year I am confident that the management changes that have taken place at Racal-Milgo, Miami, will result in an improved contribution to Group profitability.

Referring to the other factor which adversely affected last year's results, namely, the delay in the placing of a large number of orders from overseas, there are signs that the position is now improving.

Provided therefore that major delays do not continue and subject to any other circumstances beyond our control, we can look forward to another record year, our 29th in succession.

Ernest T. Harrison
Sir Ernest Harrison OBE,
Chairman and Chief Executive.

ECGD hint of private involvement

The committee of inquiry, announced yesterday, to investigate the state-run insurance agency, the Export Credits Guarantee Department, has a three-pronged brief.

Most fascinating will be to look into "the possibility of devolving any functions to the private sector or collaborating with the private sector in carrying them out".

This suggests that the ECGD, which has £29bn in British exports on its books, is a monopoly.

But Sir Peter Matthews, the Vickers chairman, who heads the inquiry, already knows (having served on the Export Guarantees Advisory Council) that all its work is open to private sector competition.

The largest of the specialist companies underwriters total business in one year that ECGD guarantees in two to three days, the House of Commons Committee of Public Accounts heard this year.

It concluded: "We are not convinced enough is yet being done to draw upon private sector expertise." It did not do so because ECGD was seen as jealously guarding its activities, but because the state agency, having had staff cuts, does not possess sufficient specialists to cover its outstanding risk.

The task facing Sir Peter, therefore, is not to bring large chunks of a state business to a hungry market of investors. He has to see whether existing private activities can be encouraged.

The review, the first in 11 years, is welcomed by industry. Lord Selsdon, chairman of the CBI's export credit committee, said yesterday: "We are delighted the government has decided to act."

"In today's highly competitive trading conditions, the time is ripe to ensure that the department can provide UK exporters with credit insurance and financing facilities as effective as those available to our international trading competitors."

Outside specialists will, without doubt, continue to grow in importance. But they are still comparatively young and in a market which seems claims maturing over several years.

Saudi sales safe

Britain's soaring exports to Saudi Arabia are among the least likely to be threatened by the kingdom's second successive devaluation on its currency in a week, trade specialists stressed yesterday.

British exports reached £767m in the first six months of this year, against £644m the same time last year.

British purchases were expected to fall during the oil glut, but the sharp decrease in imports (down from £815m to £458m in the same periods) has not only put Britain into a two-way trade surplus.

It emphasises the problems of cash generation facing all energy-exporting countries. The British sales rise overlaps with a period when the kingdom's balance of payments have moved into deficit and with a decrease in government spending, by 6 per cent, to £2.5bn in the first four months of the country's fiscal year, ending August 8.

The Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency at the weekend brought the rial's value down to 3.48 against the dollar, from 3.47, a week after devaluing it from 3.45.

Britain's claim to have one of the world's most open markets is backed by a Department of Trade and Industry study, just published, which shows the number of duty-free imports of manufactured goods doubling in 20 years.

In 1960, according to Visible Imports Subject to Restraints, about 40 per cent of Britain's factory-produced goods from overseas were allowed in without duties. By 1980, it was 80 per cent. The average incidence of tariffs on the rest halved to 9 per cent.

Membership of the EEC obviously had a large impact, but the study notes that the EEC supplied only 47 per cent of Britain's manufactured goods in 1980.

Many products from Commonwealth countries have lost their duty-free privileges, it says.

More important, in terms of protectionism, the study claims that only 7 per cent of British visible imports was subjected to non-tariff restraints.

Mr Cecil Parkinson, Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, has asked Professor Anbrey Silbertson of the Imperial College of Science and Technology, London, to examine what barriers the British producers face in world markets, and how restraints on low-cost imports affect their performance.

Channon for Colombia

Mr Paul Channon, the Minister of Trade, is expected to visit Colombia soon in what would be his most important trip overseas since becoming trade minister. Two British bids were among eleven submitted two weeks ago for the $650m (£435m) mass transit subway system to be built in Medellin.

GEC is leading an Anglo-German consortium, while Hawker Siddeley is in a British-Canadian grouping. The visit would give Mr Channon the opportunity to stress that the Government is prepared to back a British contractor to the hilt, having prepared a £50m aid package to go with it.

Positive signs have begun to emerge that business activity is increasing

REPORTS RON MARLER, CHAIRMAN

- We have continued our 15 year record of uninterrupted growth in sales and profits.
- The proposed annual dividend has been substantially increased to 3.00p net reflecting our confidence in the Group's prospects.
- R.S. Components, our largest subsidiary, achieved a very commendable sales growth of 21.4% and effected the move of most of their business to Corby.
- Our newest subsidiary, Mesa, in the USA expects a profit in the current year. The business has great potential.
- Technology in electronics continues to develop rapidly and the advantages of its application gain increasing acceptance.
- We are currently pursuing business opportunities in the USA and look for similar developments in Europe.
- The Group has made a good start to the current year and recent developments should help to increase sales and profits in 1983/84.

Copies of the Report and Accounts can be obtained from the Secretary, Electrocomponents plc, 37/45 City Road, London EC1P 1HX.

CRICKET: A TWO-HORSE RACE AS COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP ENTERS FINISHING STRAIGHT

Essex quick to steal a march on the leaders

By Alan Ross

WELLINGBOROUGH: Essex (23pts) beat Northamptonshire (6) by 128 runs.

Essex, batting until half an hour after lunch, set Northamptonshire the task of making 262 runs in 129 minutes and 20 overs. Larkins and Cook, going about their job like sergeant majors, rattled up 50 in no time, but once they had gone, the innings with no Lamb or Kapil Dev to boost it, and Sharp absent injured, began to fall apart.

Half their wickets had gone for 80 and, with the pitch never entirely reliable, Northamptonshire's situation soon became hopeless. Steele put up some brave resistance, but Essex triumphed with 14 wickets in hand. They remain very much in contention for the championship.

On an altogether cooler and cloudier morning, Essex scored Turner. Unfortunately Larkins himself was comprehensively bowled by Lever shortly afterwards and Northamptonshire were on a hiding to nothing.

Boyd-Moss was magnificently caught by David East for 50, and from 50 for, they were 58 for four. Williams struck a quarter of boundaries on either side of tea and then the two departed. Capel, who batted so promisingly in the first innings, this time was all pads and edges.

The Essex fielders began to run more and more hungrily to their positions and there was now only Steele's silver thimble, generously unconcealed, and a bare-footed dandy.

Once or twice there were glimpses of his old trusty hook and it soon became plain he would have to be pried out. In the end he was, Gooch running back at slip to catch an awkward slip.

Middlesex one up

Middlesex have a match in hand over Essex. They play Somerset, Surrey and Northamptonshire at home and Sussex, Yorkshire and Nottinghamshire away. Essex, in their remaining matches, take on Gloucestershire, Worcestershire and Yorkshire at home, and play Surrey and Lancashire away.

122 before lunch. Griffiths bowled admirably for an hour, finding a brace of a half to get Gloucestershire caught off their gloves, and then having McEwen leg before three balls later.

Another wicket at this point and Essex could have been in trouble. Hardie and Fletcher, however, soon regained the initiative, cutting and driving as Griffiths tired. Griffiths was kept at it about half an hour longer than was good for him, and the spinners when they appeared were cursed with some relief. After lunch, Essex gave the Northamptonshire outfielders catching practice, sixes and wickets coming in about equal quantities.

Larkins, disdainfully belligerent, and Cook got Northamptonshire off to a fine start, both of them hooking any ball pitched remotely short. Larkins, in this mood, is only rivalled by Gooch and as long as he was present Northamptonshire had every chance.

He lost Cook at 51, caught at square leg putting a stop to any hope of a late surge. Larkins was unable to get out of the way of a steep climber from

Briers: 201 not out, a career best

Cavalier Briers brightens up gloom

By Peter Ball

EDGEMONT: Warwickshire (6pts) drew with Leicestershire (5).

A career best 201 not out by Nigel Briers could not save the way for a Leicestershire victory yesterday. Briers, who dominated in stands of 133 with Balderson, 132 with Davidson, and 133 with Whistler, put Leicestershire in a virtually unassailable position in an innings of 354 minutes, but the delay in the declaration while he reached 'that milestone left Warwickshire an almost insurmountable target. They had already abandoned the chase when day light and rain ended any chance of Leicestershire bowling them out.

Leicestershire's cautious batting had given them a useful launching pad for an assault, and 152 runs came in the two hours before lunch. By then Briers had reached 186, far exceeding his previous best of 119 completed on this ground four years ago and the lead had stretched to 299.

If there was no serious question then of a declaration, by the time Briers reached his chances double century with 29 runs and one six, it had become a pressing one. Whistler in the meantime had taken the opportunity to notch his maiden 50. To be fair, not to his generosity, in these matters, allowed Old to complete the remaining five balls of the over after the milestone had been passed, before setting Warwickshire to score 340 in 210 minutes.

Surrey bounce past a milestone

By Richard Streeton

GUILDFORD: Surrey (24pts) beat Worcestershire (5) by 227 runs.

A devastating spell by Thomas Rowlandson sent Surrey's innings to a premature end. Surrey's innings was a masterpiece of seam bowling, with Rowlandson taking 5-48 in 10 overs. Surrey's batsmen were out of their minds, with 100 runs scored in the first 10 overs.

It was a record for Surrey, who had never before scored 100 runs in the first 10 overs of an innings. Surrey's batsmen were out of their minds, with 100 runs scored in the first 10 overs.

Injury keeps Whelan out

Rooney Whelan is likely to be Liverpool's only regular first team player absent from the Charity Shield match against Manchester United at Wembley on Saturday. He has been ruled out from this game, and the start of the league season, while he recovers from a pelvic operation.

The Welsh international forward, Rush was passed fit by a specialist yesterday after being out of action with a pelvic operation.

● Terry Gibson, aged 20, became Coventry City's eighth new signing of the summer when he left Tottenham Hotspur for a transfer fee of £70,000. The deal is subject to a medical examination.

● Leeds United should learn today how much they must pay for the Celtic forward, George McCluskey. He moved south from Glasgow, but Leeds have offered £100,000 against Celtic's asking price of £175,000.

The matter will be settled in Manchester at a hearing attended by representatives of the Football League and Scottish League with an independent chairman from the Irish League.

● Martin O'Neill must wait until tomorrow week to discover where he will start the new season. Norwich's Irish international has agreed to join Norwich County but the signing will only proceed if County agree with a tribunal valuation.

Chelsea, who are also keen on O'Neill, will be keeping a close watch on the hearing in London.

● Nine clubs have been charged by the Football Association for fielding behaviour on the field last season, and could be fined under rule 33A. They are Brentford,

Football

Charlton Athletic, Chelsea, Millwall, Wimbledon, Northampton Town, Exeter City, Manchester City and Mansfield Town.

● Colchester United are to receive £43,500 in sponsorship from the Royal London Mutual Insurance Society this season. They believe it to be the biggest single cash payment outside the first division.

The company have been sponsoring United since 1980 but no details of the amount involved have ever been revealed before by either side.

● Derby County's team manager, Roy McFarland, is to play again when Derby meet Tranmere Rovers at Prenton Park tonight in Les Perry's testimonial.

McFarland, who has played 322 games for Derby, moved on to Bradford City as their player-manager.

Victory, steered at the start by Lawrie Smith, came off best in the preliminary stages as the Australian yacht over the line after building up a commanding lead of 1min 46sec by the third mark, only to see the order reverse when the light 6 to 9 least shifting wind boxed the compass.

ATHLETICS: THE BATTLE CONTINUES AT THE EUROPEAN CUP FINAL

The newly-crowned princes take golden ways to the Palace

By Pat Butcher

More than half the world championship gold medal winners are expected at Crystal Palace, this weekend, when Steve Cram leads a British team looking to repeat the European Cup final success they enjoyed in Zagreb in 1981. They had their best ever performance in the bi-annual competition in that year, and finished third in the men's event, and equal third on points with the West German women, and only conceded the place on the cumbuck of individual winners.

Cram has decided to contest the 1,500 metres, his world championship gold medal event, in the competition which allows only one athlete per country in each event. Cram's decision means that Steve Overt will not be running, a disappointment for everyone, including the event's sponsors, O-Bix, who also have Overt on an individual contract.

Overt turned down the chance of running in the 5,000 metres, telling Bill Evans, the British Amateur Athletic Board chairman, who offered him the place, that his training was not geared to that event. Overt did not ask to run in the 800 metres, though many had expected him to. He said that he thought Peter Elliott was the evident choice.

Cram was the substitute for an injured Overt two years ago in Zagreb in the 1,500 metres, when the finished third. But he will be an obvious favourite for his event, which is on Saturday, the same day that Fatima Whitbread, a silver medal winner in Helsinki, will be throwing the javelin.

Finland did not reach either of the finals, so Miss Whitbread will not get the opportunity of a return match against Tina Liljak, who beat her to the gold medal on her last throw of the world championships competition. But there will be several quick return matches for marginal losers, among them Werner Schuldhauer of East Germany against Alberto Cova of Italy in the 10,000 metres, which is also on the first day.

In Helsinki, as in Athens last year in the European championships, Cova came from behind on the last lap, as if in slow motion, to pip Schuldhauer for the gold. The reaction to such supreme efforts is often finishing down the field in the next race, but with the system of one athlete per country in each event, and his team mates yelling to remind him of it, patriotism could help Cova find the reserves for another winning sprint finish.

Daley Thompson, Britain's only other gold medal winner from Helsinki, declined the offer of the place in the long jump, explaining that his efforts in winning the decathlon had exhausted him. The place in the 5,000 metres has been given to Steve Harris, who won the World University Games championship at that distance, but just failed to qualify for Helsinki, even though he also won the AAA title. Harris ran into his best form a little late, but this can be put to best use now.

Keith Connor will be party to another interesting confrontation in the triple jump. Connor was widely expected to win the event in Helsinki, but final exams and his relatively shallow year in training, which is designed to bring success in next year's Olympic Games, conspired to bring about Connor's failure to qualify for the Helsinki final. Zdzislaw Hoffmann of Poland produced one of the best performances of the championships, improving with each of his six jumps to overtake Willie Banks for the gold medal in this event.

Allan Wells should need no urging, especially in the 200 metres. Wells has been nominated for both sprints, but in the longer one he will find Pietro Mennea of Italy, who has beaten Wells by a total of two hundredths of a second in their last two major confrontations. The Italian won the Olympic gold by the one fraction in Moscow, leaving Wells with the silver. Then last Sunday, Mennea again beat Wells by the slightest possible margin, this time for the bronze medal. Wells was thus relegated to his second fourth place of the championships.

There is no possibility of Britain challenging the prospective winners of the week-end events, the Soviet Union or East Germany, but the West German men are the perennial targets for third place, and but for one woman - Jarmila Kratochvilova - Britain's women could be vying for third as well. There is some confusion as to which three individual events, out of 100, 200, 400 and 800 metres, plus the two relays, that Miss Kratochvilova will contest, but she will surely be a one-woman strike force.

What is more, he is a dyed-in-the-wool Southerner. "I went to watch Fulham Rugby League club as a joke. But I was mesmerized," he said. That was three and a half years ago, and being a hip young go-getter of a fellow, he thought Rugby League was suitable for an immediate transplant to the garden of England.

Smoking a real chairman-of-the-board cigar, but wearing a tee-shirt bearing the legend "New York Mets" and faded blue jeans, this child of the Sixties, who earns his money by providing addicts with such items of paleontological interest as records by Iron Butterfly, is a bona fide enthusiast.

"I want to sell the sport to the local people. The match ball for our first game against Cardiff on Sunday will be brought to the pitch by parachute. We plan to have majorettes and Kentish Morris dancers. After all, this is Kent. But the ultimate thing is the 80 minutes of action."

Calvin Smith and Ermit King, who won silver and bronze medals behind him.

Coghlan, Ireland's first gold medal winner in a major championships since Ron Delaney won the Olympic 1500 metres in 1956, runs the mile, and Ed Moses embarks on his 82nd straight victory in the 400 metres hurdles. Also competing are Mary Decker, Tina Liljak, Bert Cameron, Willy Wulbeck, Edward Sarul and Zdzislaw Hoffmann, take part en route to the European Cup final at Crystal Palace on Saturday and Sunday.

Kenyan seeks inquiry

Nairobi (Reuters) - Isiah Kiplagat, the secretary of the Kenyan Amateur Athletic Association, has called for an official investigation into the poor showing of Kenya at the world championships in Helsinki. "We have always prided ourselves as a leading athletics nation in Africa, and to return home empty-handed is a disgrace," he told reporters on his return from the championships.

"Our athletes have shamed us and we must find out why," he said, demanding an inquiry to examine the medal families after the athletes trained in world-class times at meetings in West Germany and Hungary before the championships.

CYCLING

Tour man takes to world stage

By John Wilcockson

Two Glasgow cyclists, the professional Robert Miller and the amateur James McCabhan are in the British team for the world championship road races at Altenrhein, Switzerland, from August 31, to September 4.

Miller, the Tour de France stage winner, competes in the 70-kilometre professional road race, the final event of the series. With him will ride another Tour de France finisher, Graham Jones, and the two track specialists, Sean Yates and Tony Doyle.

Mandy Jones will defend her world title in the four-lap 60-kilometre women's road race, backed by the experienced Catherine Swinerton and two relative newcomers, Judith Painter and Helen Edwards.

The make-up of Britain's quartet in the 100-kilometres team time trial will be determined after a training session this evening.

By Jenny MacArthur

Michael Tucker's General Bugle is out of the team for the European three day event championships this week at Frauentfeld in Switzerland, after striking himself during a gallop on Monday. Tucker replaced by Loren Clarke, who had been working unsuitably to prepare the home-bred General Bugle, and well deserved his place in the team after coming second at Badminton and sixth at Holker Hall, the final trial.

The only consolation for the Gloucestershire farmer aged 38, is that General Bugle is only eight and should have many years ahead of him in top level competition.

Miss Clarke, from Berkshire, has a wealth of experience in eventing. She first won the Burghley horse trial in 1967, riding the coloured horse Popadon. Like Tucker, she spent many years "knocking at the door" but did not have the right horse.

RUGBY LEAGUE: THE MAN BEHIND KENT INVICTA

A 'hip' chairman out on a limb

When policemen start to look younger than you, it's time to start worrying, but when the chairman of a Rugby League club looks younger, it's time for serious panic to set in. Paul Fairies, the chairman of the Rugby League's newly-elected club, Kent Invicta, is not only aged 29, and not only runs a record business, but also spent the golden years of his youth as a disc jockey on the pirate radio station, Radio Caroline.

What is more, he is a dyed-in-the-wool Southerner. "I went to watch Fulham Rugby League club as a joke. But I was mesmerized," he said. That was three and a half years ago, and being a hip young go-getter of a fellow, he thought Rugby League was suitable for an immediate transplant to the garden of England.

Smoking a real chairman-of-the-board cigar, but wearing a tee-shirt bearing the legend "New York Mets" and faded blue jeans, this child of the Sixties, who earns his money by providing addicts with such items of paleontological interest as records by Iron Butterfly, is a bona fide enthusiast.

"I want to sell the sport to the local people. The match ball for our first game against Cardiff on Sunday will be brought to the pitch by parachute. We plan to have majorettes and Kentish Morris dancers. After all, this is Kent. But the ultimate thing is the 80 minutes of action."

"People ask me why Rugby League, instead of Rugby Union? I quote the old Rugby League joke: 'In Rugby Union, the spectators get the ball more often than the players'. League is all action. It is a ball-handling game. The tackles are clean and all out in the open. There is none of that hiding under a pile of bodies, the dirty play that goes on unseen, the stamping on heads, that makes Rugby Union, I believe, a game of cowardice and thuggery."

Mr Fairies is hoping an 8,000 crowd will come - out of curiosity - to the first match, and hopes from this to entrapure a regular following of 2,500 a match. Kent Invicta are quoted as 25-1 for the second division championship. "If we finish eighth or above I will be pleased. But morale is so high at the moment, we have managed to sign so many good first division players, we have such a superb coach, Bill Goodman, that there are times I believe we will do much better than that."

"I find it incredible that all this has happened. I'm a nervous wreck. But I also think we have pulled off one of the greatest sporting coups of all time". Mr Fairies' cigar had gone out. He relit and dreamed his high dreams about the Rugby League ball that would fall from heaven at his prompting, into the fair fields of Kent.

Now Belfast team may join League

By Keith Macklin

An attempt by a consortium of businessmen to launch a rugby team in Belfast, was announced yesterday by David O'Leary, the League's secretary. Speaking at a lunch in Blackburn, which a three-year £270,000 contract for sponsorship of the championship and promotion will favour those sides who wish to open up play and attack, Mr O'Leary said.

Referees have been instructed to tidy up the play the ball rule and to make sure that the ball is brought cleanly and properly into play after a tackle. Referees will be under the scrutiny of expert this season, with assessors at each game to back up club reports.

With new laws in operation, and winter tours from the Australian champions, Queensland, and the New Zealand Maori's, a magnificent season is in prospect.

The £270,000 sponsorship will be provided by the Blackburn based brewery, Matthew Brown. Of this sum £59,000 will be invested in the League's capital development fund.

FOOTBALL: Leeds United asked the Football Association to help them collect £35,000 still owed for Alex Salabei. He returned to Argentina in January 1982 but only £65,000 of £100,000 fee agreed with Estudiantes has been paid.

YACHTING

Storming to victory

By John Nicholls

For the second windy day in succession, Ian Russell and Jeremy Hartley were convincing winners at the national 12 class championship at Llandudno yesterday. The race, sponsored by Nott's, was the third of six in the series and was another severe test of stamina and skill.

The westerly breeze was probably not as consistently strong as on the previous day but with the course laid closer to the shore, there was more variation in the gusts. Only 52 of the 72 starters completed the three triangular rounds, many capsize repeatedly and two inverted boats were abandoned after their crews were taken off.

Eventually the missing boats were recovered, everyone was accounted for and repairs to gear, bodies and morale should put the full fleet back in action today.

Today's race is for the Sir William Burton Trophy, one of the oldest in the dinghy racing calendar. It has been won for the past two years by Graham Bailey, who had a successful seventh place yesterday.

at the third rounding of the gybe mark.

Our ahead throughout the race were Fennell and Hartley, who sailed impressively on the wild, planning races. The protest sequence of strong winds and lowering skies is clearly to their liking and they will be hoping for something similar today.

The Burton race is normally held over a longer course than is usual in dinghy racing. If conditions are unsuitable, it will be postponed until tomorrow.

Frances Tomelty as Gwendolyn in See Saw Street. BBC 1 9.25pm

● Frances Tomelty's performance in See Saw Street is a play BAZAAR AND RUNNEMEAD (BBC 1 9.25pm), a cured agoraphobic who has taken on the role of adviser to a trio of disparate women who are long-term sufferers, is a joy to watch. The play, first seen with music at the Royal Court last year, is set in a church hall in west London. Gwendolyn, a rejected social worker, is setting up a jumble sale with the help of no-nonsense Felicity, a trainee social worker. In their care are isolated, Katherine and Margaret who are experiencing their first taste of life outside their homes for many years. How they react to each other in the company of their mentor produces some very witty lines but I experienced a feeling of unease laughing at characters suffering from what must be a very frightful problem. ● The Bronx, it would seem, has been awash with documentary film makers, what with After the Fires on ITV last night followed tonight by EVERYMAN: THE MIRACLE OF INTERVALE AVENUE (BBC 1 10.35pm). Fortunately they focus on different aspects of the area and hardly overlap in content. 'Intervale' is about a small and beleaguered Jewish community who boast a host of Runyonesque characters in their congregation. From Mr Sachs the baker who has unofficially taken over the mantle of rabbi and Dave Lentin, a tubercular signwriter, to Mrs Miroff, the dressmaker who is looked upon as a mother by a feared bunch of blacks and Puerto Ricans. Filming this particular documentary had its hazards as the team witnessed a gangland shooting with a ricochet grazing a 90-year old lady in the synagogue. ● Anybody who has endured the trials and tribulations of trying to give up smoking will relate to Peter, Sue Rodwell's hero in comedy NO, REALLY, I'VE GIVEN UP (Radio 4 3.30pm). Geoffrey Collins plays Peter, a quiet, intelligent commuter who decides it will be better for his health to kick the habit - a decision which wife Viv is in total agreement. But forces outside blissful domesticity combine to undermine Peter's resolution, a situation that leads to comic repercussions.
